

Christianity Will Be Big Weapon--Lewis

Christianity will always be a strong weapon against Communism in China and may ultimately drive Communism from that country, Dr. Ralph C. Lewis, medical missionary from China, told A&M Journalism students Monday.

Lewis, who recently returned from more than 20 years service in China, believes that Christianity is the reason many Chinese have been able to endure the mental and nervous strains imposed by the Communists.

"The majority of the Chinese do not believe the Communist line," said Lewis. "The majority of the people who accepted communism were students. The rest of the people were usually intelligent enough to see beneath the communist front," he said.

There is a tremendous amount of political unrest among the people of China, Lewis said, but he didn't believe there was any organized unrest.

If Chaing Kai-Shek, leader of the Nationalist Chinese on Formosa, could invade the mainland and hold it, the people would probably follow him, Lewis said.

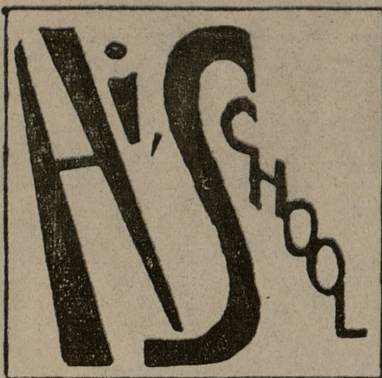

The Church is a real power in China today because the people have not forgotten the relief supplies sent by the American people at the close of the last war.

Lewis believes that the Church will stay in China and that through its continuous acceptance, the Communists will meet their downfall.
