Shivers Choice Ends Speculation

Allan Shivers announced Monday he would be a candidate for re-election as governor of Texas "subject to the action of the Democratic primary on July 24, 1954."

The announcement ended speculation as to whether Shivers would run on the Democratic ticket or the Republican ticket, since he represented both parties in 1952.

Texas voters are well aware that he also may still file as a Republican, a step which was declared legal two years ago.

Regardless of which party he represents, there are those who feel Shivers has such complete command of Texas voters that he could run on a laundry ticket and still win. His dramatic ability to put across a particular point borders on the flawless.

Local voters who gathered at the North Gate in 1952 when Shivers spoke for the Republican candidate for president will remember his forceful speaking manner.

At one point of the talk, "Leaders of the National Democratic party are using as a motto, 'You never had it so good!'" Here Shivers paused several seconds for effect, then shouted into the microphone, "WHO never had it so good?"

From the enthusiasm with which he filed for a tedious third term, we might be inclined to say, Allan Shivers, for one.

Kahan Named Head Of A&M Foundation

A. M. Kahan, assistant for research to the head of the oceanography department, has been named director for the A&M Research foundation.

He will succeed Dean of Engineering H. W. Barlow, who has been serving as acting director for the foundation since the death of Dr. A. A. Jakkula, first head of the organization.

The Research Foundation is a non-profit corporation conducting research for private industry and public agencies, using staff and facilities of the A&M system. Its headquarters are in the System Administration building.

Kahan is a native of Denver, and a 1936 graduate of the University of Denver, where he majored in mathematics and chemistry. He took his MA degree at the same school in 1940, did graduate work at the California Institute of technology and is now a candidate for PhD in meteorological oceanography here.

The 37-year-old scientist has had experience in industry and with the armed forces. This included weather forecasting for the air force in Alaska from 1941-44. He was awarded the Legion of Merit for outstanding contribution to the success of the Aleutian campaign during this period. In 1944 and 1945 he was in charge of research on upper air forecasting and analog selection, serving as assistant chief of the forecast branch for the air force at Washington, D.C.

Kahan has served as chief of the hydrology unit of the hydro-meteorological section of the U S Weather bureau and as director of engineering research for the American Institute of Aerological Research, before coming here in January, 1953, to join the oceanography department.

Summer Jobs Open In Oceanography

Freshman and sophomore science and engineering majors may work with the oceanography department at A&M this summer, said Dick Adams of the oceanography department.

Work in meteorology and oceanography will be available to science and engineering majors wanting to earn extra money and learn interesting work, he said.

The jobs will include plotting weather maps, radar weather tornado observation and analysis, field measurements of weather elements and evaluation of data obtained on cruises over the gulf.

Students can work at these jobs although they plan to attend summer classes, Adams said.

Nine Aggies Ride In Waller Rodeo

Nine A&M students will participate in the Waller county Future Farmers of America rodeo April 23 and 24.
