Industrial Development Talks Spotlight Water Resources

Various phases of the establishment of a Texas resources and development center spotlighted the discussions at the fourth annual Industrial Development conference held at A&M Sept. 2-3. More than 100 persons attended.

Speakers voiced the sentiment of the conference that such a setup in Texas was needed, where information on every section of the state may be gathered and disseminated from a central point.

Bankers, scientists, chamber of commerce men, industrialists, and others were in attendance and the trend of the discussions also revolved around ways and means of further development of what the state already has in the way of industries.

Nothing definite was done in the way of setting up an information center, but it will be taken up for further study.

Joe L. Dildy of the Arkansas Resources and Development commission outlined the workings of the Arkansas organization. He said it was a going concern and an asset to all of Arkansas.

C. H. Topping, an official of the E. I. du Pont de Mours and Company, said that usually a favorable area for a plant location is one where the citizens welcome industrial development. He outlined some factors which influence the selection of a site for a new industry, including transportation, taxes, and water supply.

D. E. Carlson, A&M industrial engineering department, who chaired the conference, said it was one of the best ever held.

Other speakers included Davis M. McMahon, general merchandise office, southwest territory, Sears, Roebuck and Company, Dallas; Alfred G. Dale, research assistant, Bureau of Business Research, University of Texas; L. S. Paine, industrial development section, Engineering Experiment station, A&M, who chaired one of the sessions; Gordon H. Turrentine, Houston chamber of commerce, chairman of the question and answer panel session, composed of Topping, McMahon, Dale Ted Clifford, Texas Employment commission, chairman of the opening session; Paine, Jack Springer, Bryan chamber of commerce; C. Ray Martin, U. S. Small Business administration, Dallas; H. Clifford Till, MKT Lines, Dallas; Trevor Clark, Southwest Research institute, San Antonio; Robert L. Dabney, Houston Pipe Line Co.; Carl C. Luckel, MP Lines, Houston; R. H. Burchfield, industrial realtor, Houston, chairman of the Friday morning session; Ben Whitehouse jr., Whitehouse Reinforced Plastic company, Ft. Worth; Gregg P.
