Vote Planned To Name Council For Non-Regs

The election of civilian dormitory floor and ramp representatives has tentatively been set for Sept. 30, Bennie Zinn, head of the student affairs department, announced Tuesday.

"We are waiting until the civilian students get settled and have a chance to get acquainted," he said.

Thirty-six students will be elected from the civilian dormitories, and these students along with the house master and dormitory senator will elect representatives to the proposed civilian student council. All the members of the 14-man council will be elected from the floor and ramp representatives.

Functions Explained

Zinn explained the functions of the dormitory representatives and the council like this:

The council will handle problems arising among the civilian students. At least two days before each council meeting, the floor and ramp representatives will meet to discuss any problems that have arisen. If the problem concerns all the non-military students, it will be taken to the council.

However, if the cadet corps is also concerned, the matter will also be discussed with the cadet colonel. If the problem is still unsettled, then it will be taken to the student senate.

The election planned for Sept. 30 will be conducted by the house master in each dormitory and the ramp and floor representatives will be elected only by the men they will represent.

Area Representation

The number of representatives to be elected from each civilian housing area are Blizell, 3; Mitchell, 4; Milner, 4; Leggett, 4; Walton, 3; Law, 4; Puryear, 4; College View, 8; Project Houses, 1, and day students, 1.

From these students, representation on the council will be one from each dormitory, two from College View, one from the project houses, one from the day students and the three civilian representatives of the student life committee.

Zinn said the dormitory senators will not be members of the council, but they may be called to meet with the council if they are needed to discuss a particular problem.

"I hope we can elect some good men to the council," Zinn said.

CHS Classrooms To Be Ready Soon

The classroom section of the A&M Consolidated high school should be completed by Sept. 27, said Dr. L. S. Richardson, superintendent.

This part of the new building, which will house the ninth through the twelfth grades, will contain 14 classrooms and the principal's office. All of the classrooms are complete but the chalkboards. Rest rooms and the principal's office are yet to be finished.

The assembly music center is expected to be completed sometime in December or January, Richardson said. This section of the building is designed to seat 600 people during programs, with as many as 250 performers. It can be expanded by using the band room to seat nearly 900 during special occasions. The furthest person from the stage will be only 57 feet away. The contract for the building, which is located east of the present high school building, was awarded to Andrew-Parker Construction company and will cost approximately $300,000.

The assembly music center was built in an oval shape to provide maximum space with low walls, all eight feet tall, and a simple structural system having all arches the same size. The dome shape offers more economical space with its minimum outside walls. Swinging doors were eliminated from the classrooms and the walls are removable. The entire ceiling surface is covered with acoustical tile to cut down the sound level throughout the building.

Students will meet classes in the new building starting September 27.

A&M Lags Behind System Increases

Reports from each of the college presidents of the A&M System show that A&M has probably fallen behind in enrollment increase.

The reports, given at the A&M System board of directors meeting here Saturday indicate increases for the other three colleges and for A&M.

Here is the list of the oral reports:

Texas A&M

President David H. Morgan said that A&M was starting off the year with enthusiasm, and that "we now have a student life program that everyone will support."

He said the enrollment would increase only slightly this year (The increase was later reported at 3.14 per cent.), but that he expected it would go up next year "because of the program started this year."

He said there were a few more organizational improvements needed at A&M.

Arlington State College

President E. H. Hereford estimates a 30 per cent enrollment increase, from 1,500 to 2,000 students. About 500 of Arlington's students are Korean veterans.

Arlington was given a $20,000 budget increase to cover the additional expenses.

Hereford also said Arlington had started a program of remedial courses and courses for above average students.

President Speaks At Oath Ceremony

President David H. Morgan yesterday told the corps of cadets that "no one is trying to destroy the corps" at A&M. Then he listed five things that would be a detriment to the corps if allowed to happen here. Morgan was speaking at the oath-taking ceremony for cadet officers, attended by the entire cadet corps.

After saying that neither the board of directors, the faculty, nor the administration was trying to destroy the corps, Morgan then said that it was up to the individual members of the corps to strengthen it.

These were the instances he gave of things that he considered would be detriments to the corps:

Foreign Students To Hold Meeting

There will be a meeting of all foreign students in the Y.M.C.A. chapel tonight at 7 p.m., according to Bennie A. Zinn, head of the department of student affairs.

There will be discussion on immigration regulations, college program and policy, social customs in the United States, economic problems and customs in the United States, geography and political philosophy of the United States, and religious customs in College Station and the United States.

All foreign students, other Aggies and staff members are invited to attend. A short social program will follow the discussion.

• "If irresponsible persons usurp authority, as happened once last year." He was referring to a group of students packing the bags of student John Clark.

"We cannot afford another Clark case here," he said.

He also referred to the student who was dismissed for mental hazing last week as an example of a student who usurped authority.

• "The establishment of groups or cliques within the corps," specifically including secret fraternities.

Eighteen students were suspended last spring for being members of the Tonkawa Tribe, a secret fraternity. They were later reinstated.

Morgan said the board of directors had instructed him that the penalty for membership in a secret fraternity from now on would be dismissal.

• "Making raids on other schools."

"Whenever one man in an A&M uniform commits an act of depredation on another campus, to the public, the corps of cadets is doing it," he said.

• "Spreading rumors." "Check your facts carefully before you spread a detrimental rumor," he said.

• "Failure to follow the will of the majority."

After something is decided by the majority, everyone should follow along with it, and all work together, he said.

He warned against letting emotions replace judgement in making decisions.

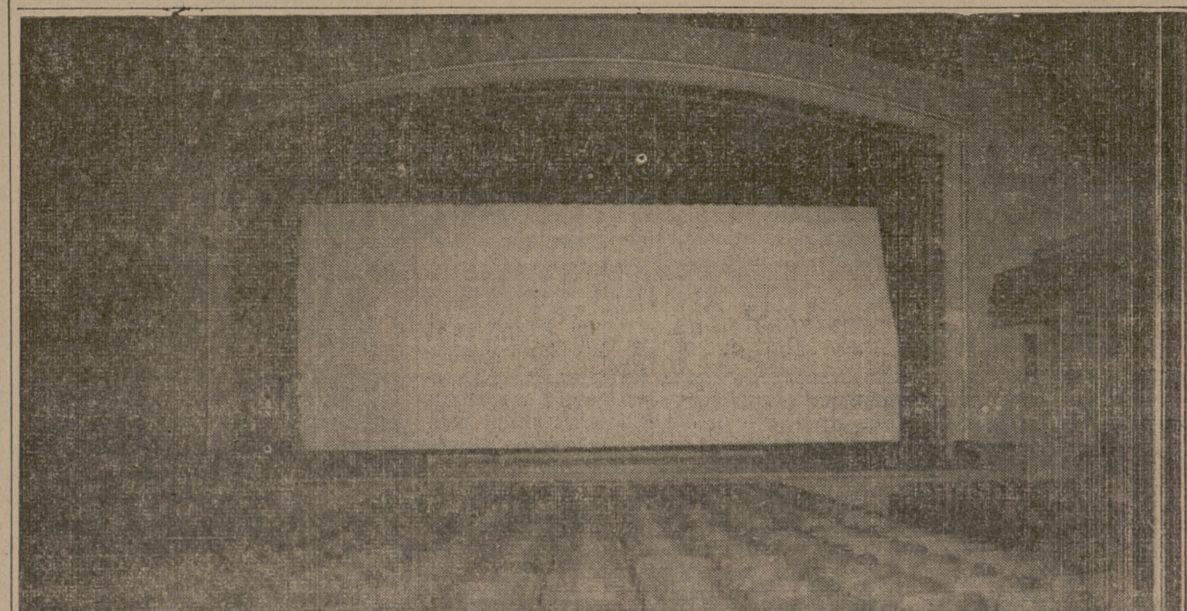

Morgan also made a plea for cooperation between military and civilian students.

Morgan said actions of the board, the faculty, and the administration had "proven their faith in the corps."

He said the board had approved consolidation of the corps, the faculty had rejected the idea of making A&M a civilian college, and the administration was trying to get special privileges for A&M as a military college.

Morgan said the defense department could, if it wished "destroy the corps," but that he did not believe it would.

In closing Morgan said that in his opinion one of the most distinguishing traits of A&M students (See MORGAN on page 2)
