A Great Opportunity

A&M students and the rest of the college community are going to get to hear about the world we live in first-hand, thanks to the MSC's Great Issues series, which has its first talk tomorrow night.

The series will bring to the campus such people as William Pollard, Harold Stassen, and Robert Hutchins, all world leaders in their fields.

They will speak on subjects that are as real and close as the next football game —

Good Show

Once again, A&M won the halftime at the football game.

No matter what the sports writers or the people in general think about the football team, there is never anything but praise for the A&M band.

Their performance at the A&M-SMU game stole the show from the SMU homecoming, and has evoked praise from everyone that saw it.

The band's long hours of practice pay off in praise for A&M.

subjects that every student or anyone else should know about.

The students and faculty members of the Great Issues committee, and the staff of the MSC, have done a great deal of work in bringing these men to the campus. It's something that people have been trying to start here for years.

Every student who paid his student activity fee has a ticket to the Great Issues series, and individual tickets are available at the MSC for people who do not have a student activity ticket.

The opportunity presented by this series does not come by often; as a matter of fact, it probably won't come by at all after you get out of college.

No one should pass it up this time.

Uh-Huh

The air force has just announced that all category I and IA students who don't file applications for flight training by Nov. 30 will be dropped from air science.

As the air force has repeatedly said, "We're not forcing anyone to take flight training."
