A Watchful Eye

Unfortunately, A&M is not through with this TT mess yet.

The Executive committee is going to take a good look at the probation by which last year's members are in school, "in the light of the findings of Tuesday's military panel."

A mighty good idea, and a good reason. In the light of that panel, which decided that McDade had definitely violated his probation, there may be more to the whole mess of True Tools.

It's no secret that students who were suspended last year for being members of the group have been seen together.

With any other group of students, just getting together would be completely innocent.

But the TT's have proved that they cannot be trusted, and they have also proved that the organization means a lot to them. Means more to them, in some cases, than A&M and its rules do.

McDade has already violated his probation, and the others on probation share slightly his guilt, because they didn't stop him from wearing his pin and displaying the TT emblem on his car.

A watchful eye or a stricter probation on them can not possibly do any harm.

Staff Must See Probation Cases

All probation freshmen must confer with the Basic Division staff before registration, Feb. 5, or they will be prevented from registering, acting Dean C. H. Ransdell said.

He also said every freshman's schedule must include a Saturday class, and those desiring to change their major should immediately fill out a change in curriculum sheet, obtainable from a Basic Division counselor. The reason for including a Saturday class is to provide a more balanced schedule, he said.

Dillon To Speak

Lawrence S. Dillon of the biology department will speak at a zoology seminar Jan. 19 at 7:30 p.m. in the YMCA cabinet room. His subject is "The Last Glacial Epoch in North America; Its Life Zones and Effects on Speciation."
