AAUW Hears Talks By Foreign Students

Two A&M students from Lima, Peru, were guests of the International Relations group of the American Association of University Women at their last meeting in the home of Dr. Meta Brown.

Juan E. Letts, a senior chemical engineering major, and Konrad P. Losen, a freshman agronomy major, told the group about the history, geography, and climate of their native country.

They said that Peru, a country rich in natural resources, is about two and a half times the size of Texas. The coastal plains have large cities such as the United States and are cooled by the cold Humboldt ocean current, which causes heavy mists in the winter. Chief crops are cotton, sugar, rice and oranges. Peru's biggest problem is bringing water to the coastal zone, as the Andes mountains form a barrier separating the zone from the forest region drained by the Amazon river.

The students told stories of the early civilizations of pre-Inca and Inca Indians, their wealth in gold and silver and skilled craftsmen. The Incas were famous agriculturists, terracing the mountains and irrigating their crops. They said that the potato was an Incan discovery.

Letts has a Clayton Anderson scholarship and Losen a Good Neighbor scholarship.

Mrs. Eugene Rush presided at the table during the social hour. Refreshments were served to about twenty-five members.

For Work Done

Methodist Men Honored

A coffee was given Sunday in the recently remodeled fellowship hall of the A&M Methodist church for the men of the church who were responsible for the labor and time donated to the halls completion.

Hosts for the coffee were Mrs. Stewart E. Brown, president of the Woman's Society of Christian Service; Mrs. Bob M. Galloway, wife of the building and grounds chairman; the Rev. Nolan R. Vance, pastor of the church and Fred J. Benson, chairman of the board.

Bob M. Galloway, professor in the civil engineering department and chairman of the church's building and grounds committee was the leader of the committee of men who tackled the remodeling job.

Other participants included Kenneth E. Bailey, Fred J. Benson, Stewart E. Brown, O. D. Butler, Eugene H. Brock, W. W. Caudill, C. F. De Villbiss, Lawrence A. DuBose, N. D. Durst, J. G. Fagan, O. H. Franks, C. B. Godbey and W. D. (Pete) Hardesty.

J. B. Herve, E. S. Holdredge, Curtis R. Holland, T. R. Holleman, N. M. Randolph, John H. Pruitt, J. Wayne Stark, C. G. (Spike) White, J. J. Sperry, Robert H. Schleider, B. H. Subbaraju, the Rev. Nolan R. Vance, Barney Welch, Don Young, and Bennie A. Zinn, also participated.

The work accomplished included cabinet making, tile laying, plastering, plumbing, wood working, color scheming and painting. The finished fellowship room housed a kitchen and social space that will be used each Sunday by an adult class. At other times it is used for luncheons and dinners of the Woman's Society of Christian Service, Methodist Men, and other groups in the church.

Financial support for the project came from the regular budget of the church and a special contribution from the Adult Sunday school class taught by Fred J. Benson.

Not being content with its achievement,

This involves adaptation of various barked upon other remodeling rooms to present Sunday school work in the educational building conditions.
