

Looks Good To Us

We don't know how you voted. We do care, for the MSC needs your help. We hope you voted "YES."

But something that looked very good at A&M was that students were taking an interest in the election. Too often in the past have elections on this campus been decided by a minority of the student body. Indications are that, this time, more students than usual were exercising their voting privilege.

A favorable vote is going toward maintaining the high standards now maintained at the Student Center. A negative vote can mean curtailed services and run-down facilities.

Everyone at A&M comes into some sort of contact with the MSC, even if it is only enjoying its appearance as a beauty spot on the campus. To preserve the "Living Room of the Campus" is the need for an affirmative vote for the fee.

To those who haven't voted, there's still a few hours left. The voting booth will be open until 5 p.m.

So preserve your Center, and, while doing yourself and the school a needed favor, you can also put yourself into the habit of using your privilege of the vote.

For it is through the vote that we in America can prevent such things as "mississippi justice" from spreading across our nation.

Complicated Drill Promised By Band

By JIM BOWER
Battalion Staff Writer

With the applause of 65,000 California fans still ringing in their ears, the Aggie Band has planned an even more complicated drill for Saturday night.

"Part of the California drill will be shown Saturday night," said Lt. Col. E. V. Adams, band director. "People have expressed a desire to see the California drill, so two of the more intricate movements will be included in this one."

Lasting almost eight minutes, the Saturday night drill will consist of 13 precision maneuvers. During the time that the band is on the field, they are playing continuously.

The drill will start in a split double minstrel turn and counter march as the band enters the field. A double delayed counter march from the center combined with right and left northwestern turns and right and left minstrel turns leaving the band in two sections on opposite sides of the field.

At this time, the two sides do a half turn and criss-cross in the center of the field. After completing the criss-cross, the band then folds back together and goes into a continuous counter march. Coming out of the counter march, a four-way minstrel turn is executed which divides the band into two parts in preparation for the simultaneous forming of "U of H" reading both ways and then "AMC" reading both ways.

After forming the letters, the band goes back into formation, forms the giant "T" and counter marches while in this formation. After a delayed counter march while still in the "T," the band does a northwestern to the right in leaving the field.

Beginning the season with the drill in Los Angeles, the band showed the Californians a new style of half-time performance.

The California fans gave the band a standing ovation with such remarks as "I don't see how they do it" and "this is the greatest band we have ever seen."

The director of the band at the University of California said that proof of the ability of the Aggie band was illustrated when they received the numerous complimentary stories from the Los Angeles papers, which, he said, "never before gave any space to bands except those from the Big Ten conference."

Tommy Short is head Drum Major of the band. He is assisted by Dwight Brown, maroon band Drum Major and Buddy Patterson, white band Drum Major.
