Weekend Advice

WHO WAS RIGHT AND WHO WAS WRONG may make a lot of difference to insurance companies or highway or city police investigating an automobile accident, but it matters very little to someone killed in the wreck.

A&M automobiles will be leaving, and some will be zooming, out of here in just a couple of days. Destination: Fort Worth and the football game there Saturday with the Horned Frogs of Texas Christian University.

Let's make sure we get to the right destination. Let's make highways a means to an end—not our end.

ANOTHER BIT OF ADVICE we might offer, which has or will be given by Corps officers, is that Corps students wear civilian clothes in Fort Worth Friday night and after the game. We're not hoping for trouble, and anything that can be done to mitigate any irritation on the part of certain persons can go a long way toward helping prevent fights. For some reason, parts and pieces of the A&M uniform seem to be prized souvenirs; but it's an expensive practice on the victim, and someone could very easily get hurt. Staying together in fairly large groups, staying orderly, and staying out of dark back-streets and alleys will also help to prevent trouble from occurring.

Today's Borrowed Thoughts

"And one of the terms of peace, the loudspeakers say, is to be disarmament. There are to be no more guns, no army, no navy, no air force in the future. No more young men will be trained to fight with arms. That rouses another mind-hornet in the chambers of the brain—another quotation. "To fight against a real enemy, to earn undying honor and glory by shooting total strangers, and to come home with my breast covered with medals and decorations, that was the summit of my hope . . ."

"Those were the words of a young Englishman who fought in the last (WWI) war. In the face of them, do the current thinkers honestly believe that by writing "Disarmament" on a sheet of paper they will have done all that is needful?"

Othello's occupation will be gone; but he will remain Othello. "At last all the guns have stopped firing. . . . The natural darkness of a summer's night returns. An apple thuds to the ground. . . . And now, in the shadowed half of the world, to sleep."

Virginia Woolf, "Thoughts on Peace in an Air Raid" London, October, 1940

Football prophets who doomed the Aggies to a lowly rung on the Southwest Conference championship ladder this season have been seeing better things for A&M on their forecast charts lately, but there is at least one person who isn't convinced yet.

"Let's shuffle the member teams of the Southwest Conference a bit. I think the best idea would be to drop Texas A&M, and admit the University of Oklahoma and the University of Missouri," said Bill Kennedy, editor of the Woodboro, Texas News, a small weekly near Corpus Christi.

Mr. Kennedy, who happens to be an alumnus of Missouri U., went on to say in his column "Ah, yes let's take the case of Texas A&M. I have never been an outspoken admirer of A&M football. I have yet to notice anything remotely concerning a winning team at A&M. Let's hope that Aggie coaches teach character, or something—but it isn't football."

"Those Aggie exes who were begging Paul Bryant to take over the coaching duties at A&M will probably be yelling for his scalp in a couple of years. And, who will blame them? Bryant, on a 10-year contract, says he needs three or four to 'build his system.' I'll have to be shown, my boy."

"What is most annoying about Texas A&M lately is the fact that they don't even look good losing."

"But, and I use the Aggie-UCLA game as proof, one can almost be CERTAIN that the Aggies will lose. They show no hope, during the game, of ever breaking loose."

"No—the Aggies are not needed in the Southwest Conference, in my thoughts. Missouri could be a better, more exciting member."

A&M currently ranks 19th in the nation, Mr. Kennedy, and Missouri—well, we won't even bring up that distasteful subject.

Letters

To the Editor:

After reading your editorial concerning the A&M - University of Houston series, I must say that you are entirely right. In contests between the two schools we (the Aggies) have nothing to gain, and all to lose.

If A&M is victorious, according to the Houston papers, we are either lucky or guilty of dirty play. If we lose, we are a bum.

I am not a Rice fan, but I'm sure you will agree that we have never seen a Rice team lose their poise. And never have I heard Coach Neely make an excuse for losing. That's what keeps the likes of Bear Bryant and Jess Neely apart from the bush leaguers.

Yours truly,
Robert L. Drago Jr., '49
