the world is how stubbornly it resists efforts on our part, or any one country's part, to control or even to predict the course of its never ending drama. The forces at play in the world are too great and their inter-relationship too unpredictable."

McGhee proposed certain broad generalities which, in his opinion, will always be applicable to the conduct of the U. S. foreign policy. These were (1) The core of American foreign policy should always be the well-being and security of this country.

(2) The conduct of American foreign policy should be free from political partisanship.

(3) We should have clear long-range foreign policy objectives which are not subject to compromise and should seek in obtaining them mutual support from allies whose broad objectives are similar to our own.

(4) Both our foreign policy objectives and the methods used to achieve them should never deviate from the democratic and religious principles on which our society is based.

(5) But, finally, this does not preclude the injection into our relations with other nations all of the determination, toughness of mind, and innate practicality that has made America great.

"It is a mixture of idealism and hard-headed realism, which is in my judgment, the real contribution we Americans can make toward the peace of the world.

Thurston B. Morton, Assistant Secretary of State, will speak this afternoon at 3:30 on "Mechanics of Formulating United States Foreign Policy". Panel discussions will be held tonight from 7:30 to 10, featuring Morton, Col. G. A. Lincoln, Omar Burleson, Colonel Thomas L. Crystal and McGhee. A reception will be held immediately following the discussion honoring panel members in the assembly and birch rooms of the Center.

Letters to the Editor

Editor, The Battalion:

For centuries famous artists from all over the world have attempted to mix the color black with the other colors and have met with failure. But this has been done right here on our campus. The cooks of Duncan Hall have finally succeeded in mixing black and green in the roast "beef" they serve us, the very sight of which took away my appetite.

How can we be expected to do our best on quizzes or assignments if we haven't had anything to eat? I, for one, am used to excellent food that is served in my home and when I was here my first semester at A&M lost twenty pounds. And I have eaten the "food" they serve us with the usual amount of dormitory griping. But today I felt I had to say something about it.

In my opinion the mess hall has degenerated to the level of our hospital, and is now nothing more than a cesspool of administrative inefficiency, a blight to our campus. The school has constructed the new sidewalks, planted grass in barren spots, and improved the beauty of our school so that we can be proud to show it off to our guests. But it gets pretty bad when a student's mother and girl refuse to eat in the mess hall because of the food they serve.

The administration has cleaned up the exterior of our campus, but has sorely neglected the students themselves. But there is still time. A few of us are still alive. Why shouldn't they turn their attention to the mess hall, that starts the process, and the hospital, that applies the coup de grace?

Berne H. Clark, '57

P. S.—Maybe they could take a tip from the Borgias, who at least concealed the poison in their guest's food so that it could not be tasted.
