Extremely Disappointed

Yesterday's punishment given 12 students for swinging a broom was well commented upon by the commandant: "I am extremely disappointed that these men would do such a thing to the Corps of Cadets."

It is a mark against the entire Corps brought by a small group of men who let themselves be carried away by the spirit of the recent holidays. The Corps' primary function is to provide leaders—and for a man to be a leader he must be aware of far more than just the immediate. He must look to the far-reaching effects of every action he takes.

This breaking of the rules, another matter of concern to leaders, shows none of the former idea of a punishment; it was apparently done in a more jocular mood. But it still was just as wrong. And the wrongness exists both in the breaking of the rules and in the indignity, both to those who swung and those who received, of such a barbaric custom as using a board on grown men.

Cry out that it used to be a "tradition," that "Old Army's gone to hell," that "it's the only way to keep freshmen and sophomores in line"—any excuse one wishes to use. It's just no good; the board, and the broom, are ruled out. And at a school that is evolving with the modern world, it's ruled out for good.

Some may not like it this way, but the obligation is there. It takes a real leader to fully assume his responsibilities.

A&M Selected To Receive Radar Storm Detector Set

A&M College has been selected by the Air Force Air Research and Development Command as the first college campus to be assigned a production model of a new $200,000 radar set designed specifically for detection of storms. The arrival of the new set was announced by Dr. Myron G. H. Ligda, head of the radar meteorology section of the Department of Oceanography and Meteorology.

The new radar has been loaned by the ARDC to the A&M Research Foundation to assist in the conduct of research. The object is to increase the accuracy of weather forecasting by the use of radar storm observations.

Embodying many of the newest improvements in radar design, the powerful set is similar to that currently being installed at various Air Force Air Weather Service Stations both in the United States and abroad.

Tentative plans call for installation of the observing console in Goodwin Hall, which is now occupied by meteorologists of the Department of Oceanography and Meteorology.

partment of Oceanography and will house the entire department in the near future. At this location it will be used both for research work and instruction of meteorology students. The site of the 75-foot tower on which the antenna will be mounted has not yet been determined.
