

Infantry Students Study Machine Gun

Advanced infantry students here were recently given an indoctrination course in the firing of the .30 caliber Browning machine gun. The firing, supervised by Maj. Thomas A. George, senior infantry instructor, was done on a 1000-inch range. A sub-caliber device was attached to the machine guns and made it possible to fire .22 caliber ammunition instead of the normal .30 caliber ammunition. The students also learned about trigger manipulation for slow and fast fire and principles of gunnery elevation and traversing.
