

Students Can Help

The Arts and Sciences Council has taken a step forward in helping the committee set up by the A&M Board of Directors to study segregation policy at A&M and other colleges of the System.

Despite an individual's opinion of the rightness or wrongness of the resolution passed by the Council, the passage of such an opinion will indicate at least some of the students' views.

This expression of opinion, whatsoever it be, would be a great help, we think, to the Board's committee. And it would be a good idea for other groups, the other school councils, various groups, the Student Senate above all, the Civilian Student Council, hometown clubs, and others, also to make known their opinions.

For surely student opinion will be taken in consideration by the Board's committee, since it is students who will be most closely associated with any action taken by the Board. And, thus, it appears to us that the Board would be very appreciative of any help students can provide in studying the important issue of segregation.

The aims of the Board committee is to study the problem of integration with a view of determining what changes are justified pursuant to the rulings on this question by the U.S. Supreme Court and the Texas State Court.

Students, do your duty. This campus is too big for individual conferences by the committee with each student, so help them out by expressing your opinion through the groups which represent you.

If in doubt about just what is the System's policy, pending the findings on the Board's study on integration, talk to your dean or head of your department, or to a qualified member of the staff. The Battalion will be glad to help in any way possible, in helping to get or providing a speaker.

Letters To The Editor

Editor, The Battalion:

In your March 1 editorial, "An 'A' for History," you write that Hodding Carter, in his Great Issues speech, said many things "without expressing an opinion." I disagree with you. I feel that you have deliberately held back his ideas from publication. If this is not so, then it is logical to assume that you are incapable of interpreting daily, English speech.

That Mr. Carter did not express an opinion is a gross misrepresentation of fact.

Wednesday evening's speaker began by giving us a revue (review? - Webster defines revue as "a form of burlesque in which recent events are reviewed by imitation of their salient features and chief actors, Ed.) of the history of southern culture, the contradictions to that culture, and the contributing factors to those contradictions. This first part of his speech was intended to bring to the audience a realization of a fundamental fact: the majority of the white population of the south has not and does not want integration.

The second point presented: prior to the Federal Supreme Court's decision on integration in public schools, the South, in general, was slowly achieving better relations between the races. Mr. Carter's third point was that since the Supreme Court's order, the South has witnessed a very rapid deterioration of racial relations. Throughout his talk, Mr. Carter expressed his disapprobation of the Supreme Court's ruling.

Mr. Carter is a genuine courageous man. He has the audacity to suggest in this day and age that the determination of with whom a person will associate is to be made by the individual. He has shown that he feels that it is not right for the government to render this decision. Since segregation is more of a moral issue, Mr. Carter probably feels that it is the duty of churches, individuals and other groups to PERSUADE our fellow men to practice the Judeo-Christian concept of the brotherhood of man.

He would not have the federal government dictate this to us.

Mr. Carter has the courage to believe in the right of the individual to learn to love his fellow man by his own free will—not to be forced to pretend to do so, as Karl Marx and other Neo-Liberals would have it.

I am very strongly opposed to segregation. I am, however, aware that there are those people who do not share my views, and that their views have resulted in a way of (See LETTERS, Page 6)
