

Squeeze, Old Army!

There is no doubt where this scribe thinks the Cattle Disease Laboratory should be located. This opinion, we admit, is a bit biased. As the case develops more than just we people here at A&M have this opinion.

As the qualifications are read we see A&M described to a letter. The officials of the System have done their best to present a case before the side committee that describes our school as the only choice to be made. These men that got out the brochure Chancellor Harrington presented in St. Louis are to be commended for a job well done. To the organizations that have come to the fore and are backing us in this quest, together with the individuals over Texas and the United States we say "Thank you" for your help.

The case has gone to the jury now and all we can do is hope that the committee will make its choice on merit, not politics.

Guardsmen Return Sunday

SP. 3/C BOB WILKINS

SGT. G. B. CLARK

Monday morning some 81 men from College Station and Bryan, members of the Headquarters and Headquarters Co. 1st Bn. 143rd Infantry Regiment, took to the field for their second and final week of field training for 1956.

They will return to North Fort Hood and their "tent-city" after a four-day bivouac, including all-night operations late Thursday afternoon.

The men left College Station June 18 and are due to return Sunday morning.

Duties of the members of the company are varied and include knowledge of all types of electronic equipment as the main function of the company is to furnish the "line" companies with communications. Capt. Fowler B. (Barney) Welch commands the College Station outfit and Lt. Col.

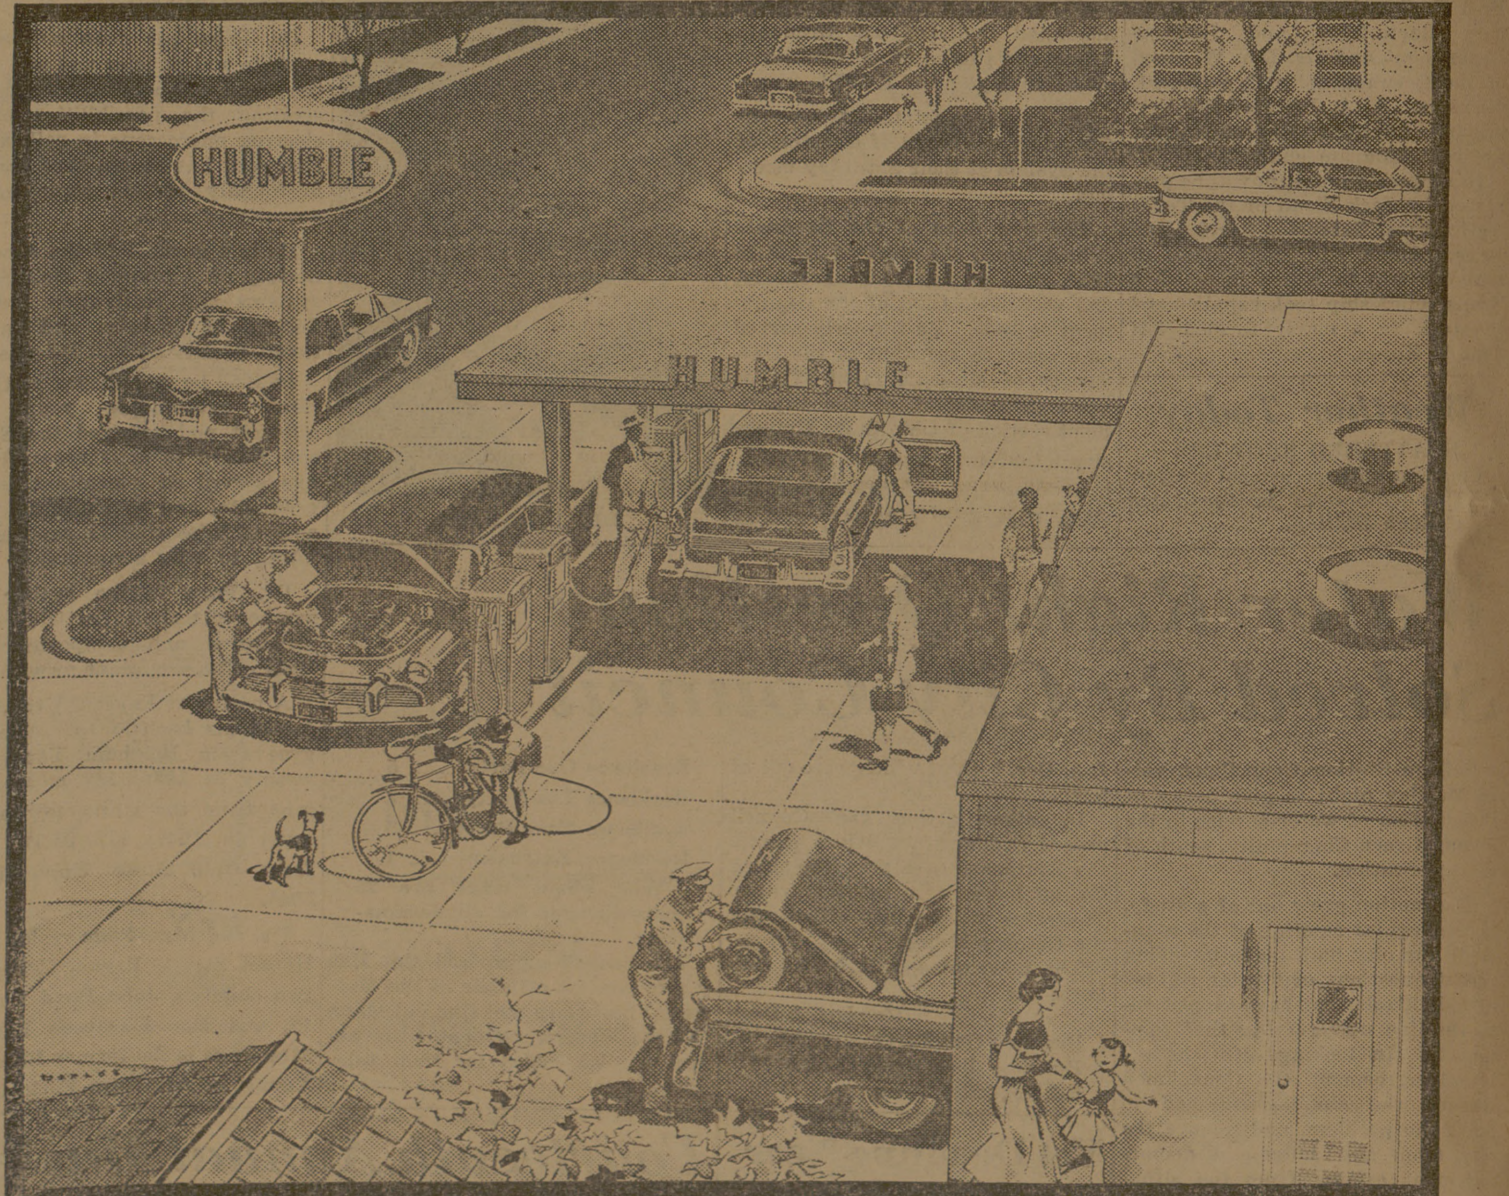

W. Taylor Wilkins, assistant commandant at A&M, is battalion commander.

Members of the company attending schools while at Fort Hood included Sgt. Morris B. Taylor, motor sergeant, Capt. William Ross, who attended intelligence school conducted by Fourth Army instructors; Sgt. William D. Gasikin, Jr., Specialist 3/c Mack E. Abbott and Specialist 3/c Jerry C. Novosad, all attended ordnance school.
