"I'm sad to say," said Tootsie Brown, "The weight I gain just gets me down. Each bite, each drop of this or that, immediately turns to fat. Some girls, I note, can eat and eat and yet they still look trim and neat. To aggravate the situation I much dislike my fat's location. I wouldn't so much want to change me, if only I could rearrange me."

Presbyterians Ordain Elders, Deacons Sunday

Three new elders and four new deacons were ordained and installed Sunday morning at the worship service of the A&M Presbyterian Church.

Dean Walter L. Delaplaine, Col. Joe E. Davis and Col. Frank G. Anderson replaced Dr. F. C. Bolton, Walter L. Manning and Jack Kent as ruling elders.

The new deacons are W. L. Penberthy, Dr. Ed H. Andrew, Dr. D. R. Paterson and Dr. John S. Rogers who replace Harry Coit, who is no longer a local resident, Dr. Bruce Zobel, D. A. Anderson and J. Garland Brown.

These newly elected officers will serve for terms of four years. Under the rotation system of church officers set up years ago, three new elders and three new deacons regularly take office each year.

The 12 ruling elders constitute the Session of the church, while the 12 deacons form the Board of Deacons.

Youngster Who Outshines Brother Brings Problem

By DOROTHY V. WHIPPLE, M. D.

AP Newsfeatures

Arthur was six and a scant two years older than his brother Harry. He had just started first grade and he felt very grown-up compared to his little brother. Arthur was a small child, wiry and healthy. He looked very much like his maternal grandmother, who was a delicate wisp of a woman.

Harry, on the other hand, was big for his age; he looked like his 6-foot-2 Dad. In temperament too, the two boys were very different. Arthur was mechanical-minded; he loved to take things apart and to everyone's amazement he often got them back together again. He was quiet and not very talkative, especially when strangers were about.

Harry, on the other hand, was a vivacious, curly-haired, attractive youngster who made his presence noticed. He was big and strong, rosy-cheeked and talkative.

It was Harry people noticed and commented about. Mother and Dad were aware of the difference between their boys. How could they help it?

They tried to make a point of bringing Arthur into the limelight. When Arthur was ready for first grade the notion of school was built up just as much as possible. They went over and visited school—Arthur and Mother together, leaving Harry at home.

It worked well. Arthur was enthusiastic about school. Here at least he could outshine Harry. Arthur brought home his little pre-primer. He was learning to read. He read all over the house. He loved to sit on his Daddy's knee and point out the words, "See Dick run."

One fine evening Harry got hold of the reading book and crawled up on Dad's lap. He began to read: "See Dick run." Arthur had been busy loading a toy truck but when he saw and heard what was happening he dashed across the room, grabbed the book from Harry's hand, gave him a good swift punch. "That's my book!" he screamed.

Dad, a little surprised by this outburst, tried to protect Harry who was by now violently fighting. When the storm abated a little Dad tried to talk to Arthur, who was still quivering with rage. "He's got no business knowing those words!" yelled Arthur. "He's not in first grade."

Dad smiled to himself—so that was it. It wasn't the book, it was that Harry was encroaching on Arthur's one claim to superiority.

After the children were in bed that night Mother and Dad had a long talk about their two boys.

How could they give Arthur the sense of worth he so desperately needed? It was a tough job. Arthur was constantly crowded by his younger brother. Harry was obviously soon going to be able to beat up his older brother physically—he was so much bigger for his age. But not only that he already outshone socially and it looked as though he might even be brighter—he'd probably get better grades at school.

"The only thing we can do," said Dad, "is build Arthur up the best we can at home. Arthur can be the fix-it man that this household just can't live without."

"It's too bad my Dad isn't around any longer," said Mother. "He was a little bit of a man but such a swell person. It would be good for Arthur to know someone built like him whom he could admire."

"At least we can talk about him," said Dad.
