

Prime Minister Remarks Run Different Ways

WASHINGTON, (AP)—Secretary of State Dulles and British Prime Minister Harold Macmillan are talking out of different sides of their mouths.

They are doing so in interpreting the achievements of the Eisenhower-Macmillan conference at Bermuda with respect to future cooperation between Britain and the United States in the Middle East.

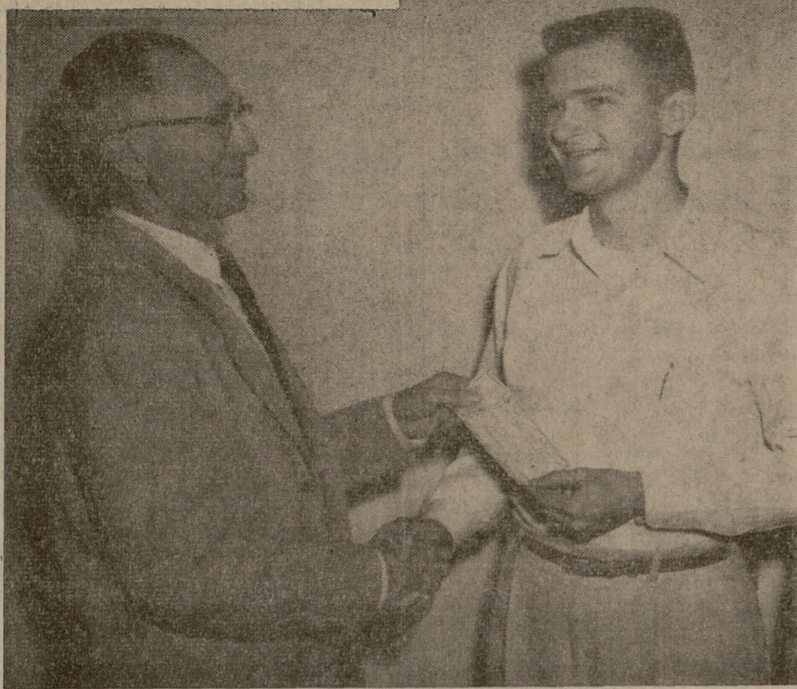

They apparently are placing a different emphasis on the importance of the Bermuda talks. Moreover, Dulles came very close yesterday to contradicting what Macmillan had said publicly at Bermuda on Sunday.

The reason for the differences seems to be that the British government has an interest in demonstrating the return of almost total harmony between London and Washington. But the United States government is trying to maintain its influence with the Arab states as well as Israel while becoming much more friendly with Britain again. Hence it does not want to show too close an understanding with the British on all points.

This is the kind of diplomatic game which could lead to serious misunderstanding between London and Washington by confusing the issue although officials on all sides obviously hope it will stop short of that point.

Dulles told his news conference yesterday that the President and he had held long informal talks with Macmillan and Foreign Minister Selwyn Lloyd at Bermuda but that they did not lead to any agreement on the Middle East.

The exchanges of views were useful, he said, in making it more likely that there would be a common policy. But he said the contingencies in that region—meaning the future of the Suez Canal and Israeli-Egyptian disputes—are so unpredictable that it seems unprofitable to try to reach a formal agreement.

Service Club Wins Honors In Fourth District Contests

Four honors have recently come to the members of the Extension Service Club, an affiliate of the Texas Federation of Women's Clubs in the Fourth District.

The club press book, prepared by Mrs. E. M. Trew, club reporter, won first place in the district contest.

Jo Anne Walker, Extension Service Club candidate and daughter of Mr. and Mrs. A. H. Walker, was named Youth of the Year in the district contest. A senior at A&M Consolidated High School, Miss Walker participates in many activities in addition to maintaining high scholastic standards.

In the district contest for Teacher of the Year, Mrs. R. E. Burleson, teacher of commercial subjects at Austin High School in Bryan, placed first. She has also taught the junior and adult Sunday school classes at the First Baptist Church in Bryan for eight years.

The Ide P. Trotter family placed second as outstanding club family in the Fourth District.
