Moonwatchers To Begin Training

Moonwatchers training is to begin very shortly, according to Jack T. Kent, head of the moon watch team.

Kent said there will be five meetings before the end of school; one for building the telescope, two others for learning how to use astronomical maps and the last two for training sessions.

"Anyone wishing to participate in the program is urged to call me, since we need some more members on the team," said Kent.

The A&M team is one of 65 teams which will track the satellite that is to be launched by the government shortly. There will be at least six satellites sent up into the atmosphere by the government, Kent said.

The local team's part in the program is so important that Dr. George Van Biesbroeck, world-famous astronomer, was on the campus last week to talk to Kent. This team may be the only team to see the small (20 inches in diameter) satellite go into space. Therefore, the team may be the most vital in the total operation, he said.

"If no team spots it, it will cost the government a billion or more dollars," said Kent.

Kent urges the Moonwatchers to report to his office every couple of days to see if new developments have taken place in the program. He also urges them to go by the physics shop to help with the construction of the telescope, and to report in as soon as possible for assignments.

The first meeting will be for working out a means for alerting the members quickly, he said.
