

T-Day Hits Campus In Full Scale Attack

For four weeks this fall the A&M campus will be the scene of some strange activity. On September 16 (which will henceforth be known as T-Day, or the Day the Trucks Came), a swarm of massive trucks of many descriptions will appear on the college's hallowed grounds—huge vans, refrigerator trucks, oil tanks, diesels, and just plain trucks.

One's first impression might be that a large part of the college is planning a mass evacuation from the campus. But observers will

Health Service Demonstrates Sanitation Aids

Full scale demonstrations of sanitary storage, collection and disposal of refuse equipment is the highlight of a day long discussion and demonstration program to be held in College Station this Friday.

The Texas State Department of Health, the U. S. Public Health Service and the City of College Station are cosponsors of the program in cooperation with heavy equipment manufacturers who will display their sanitary landfill and collection apparatus.

Registration will be at Room 107, Biology Building, from 9:00 to 9:30 a.m. There is no registration fee.

Talks on refuse collection and sanitary landfills will be given followed by a general discussion and answer period and a review of the collection equipment. After lunch (courtesy of the equipment manufacturers) the on-the-spot demonstrations will take place.

Civic groups, especially women's organizations, and any interested persons are invited to attend in addition to city officials and public health personnel.

Discussions on the public health aspects of refuse storage, collection and disposal will be given by George H. Walker of the Texas State Department of Health and Charles E. Gerhardt of the U. S. P. H. S.

Also representatives from cities surrounding the College Station area are expected to attend.

soon drop this idea when they behold the weird behavior of the invading vehicles—circling, backing, jackknifing, skidding and pirouetting as though to some macabre motorized ritual dance.

The truth is however that this activity signals the beginning of the Truck Driver School of Texas, which will attract recruit and veteran truck drivers from throughout Texas and other states as well. The new school was conceived and will be operated by, the Engineering Extension Service of the A&M College System.

The truck drivers will have a specially allotted area in which to practice fundamental driving maneuvers and sharpen up their driving techniques. This activity will certainly provide some lively scenes for campus dawdlers.

According to its officials the school will offer four action-packed weeks of training to help prepare young men for rewarding futures in the motor transportation field—and give experienced drivers that "extra edge" necessary for improvement and advancement in their jobs.

"Intensive classroom instruction and realistic field work characterize the school. The ambitious truck driver student will emerge from his studies equipped with a large measure of practical know-how, a clear understanding of the truck driver's duties and obligations, a better acquaintance with traffic laws, and a conviction to become the safest driver on the road," the officials added.

The school, in addition to providing a generous amount of behind-the-wheel practice, will conduct classes covering such practical subjects as traffic problems, ICC regulations, city driving, freight handling, driver responsibilities, customer relations, records of operation, first-aid, insurance, liability and property damage, accident prevention, preventive maintenance, license weight and lease requirements, and fuels and lubricants.

Kiwanians Hear Talk On Cheese

Dr. Isaac Peters, of the Dairy Science Department and a local Kiwanian, presented the program to that group at their weekly meeting Tuesday.

With the topic, "June—The Dairy Month," Peters showed the group one of the methods used in making cheese and actually demonstrated to them by mixing some milk and other ingredients in the form in which cheese is made.

Joe Sorrels, Kiwanis district lieutenant governor, planned to make a trip to the Brenham Kiwanis Club for an official visit. Peters was scheduled to give the program.

AIEE Members Elect New Officers

H. D. Moore was elected president of the American Institute of Industrial Engineers at its recent meeting.

Other officers elected to lead the society were N. H. Gother, vice president; B. J. Draughon, secretary; W. H. Roberts, treasurer and J. R. Porter, reporter.
