Travis Bryan Jr. told the Economics Club Tuesday night of the effects the closing of Bryan Air Force Base would have on the Bryan-College Station area.

Bryan, chairman of the Military Affairs Committee of the Bryan Chamber of Commerce, said he believes the base will not close in the near future.

The Economics club is now seeking new members. Persons interested should come by the Economics office in Nagle Hall.

LeMay Sets Mark In KC135 Tanker

WASHINGTON (AP)—A huge tanker-transport commanded by Gen. Curtis LeMay arrived over National Airport at 3:33 p. m. yesterday after flying nonstop from Buenos Aires on a record-making trip.

The average speed for the 5,204-mile flight was computed unofficially at 469.5 miles an hour.

The four-jet KC135 craft bucked headwinds during much of the flight between the two capitals. Just yesterday LeMay had flown the craft more than 6,300 miles—on a less direct course—to Buenos Aires from Westover Airforce Base, Mass. That nonstop jet distance record flight was made in 13 hours, 2 minutes.

The Air Force said this flight, made in just over 17 hours, was intended to help show how it can deliver a tactical striking force anywhere in the world.

Anti-ICBM Arms Forseen By Gen. Taylor

WASHINGTON, (AP) — Gen. Maxwell D. Taylor reported yesterday the Army is making "encouraging progress" in the development of a weapon capable of knocking down Soviet intercontinental ballistic missiles.

He spoke to a businessmen's conference which had just been told by Secretary of Commerce Weeks that in federal budget making "the emphasis now is on less butter and more guns."

Taylor, the Army's chief of staff, said "it is entirely possible to develop an anti-missile defense for the United States at an acceptable cost and in a reasonable time frame."

In a speech prepared for the National Defense Executive Reserve conference, Taylor listed the anti-missile missile as one of the main requirements for an American stand against what he predicted would be "atomic missile blackmail and rough diplomacy" by a Communist Russia proud of its strides in the missile field.

Taylor said no one should be surprised that the Soviet Union shows "recurring truculence." After all, he said, the Russians didn't hesitate to embark upon aggression even when they were inferior to the United States and its allies in the air-atomic field.

"We may well be required to respond to this recurrent toughness in an atmosphere of increased international tensions resulting from the mutual possession of weapons of great destruction," he said.

"In this event, it would be our turn to show coolness and steadiness in the face of atomic missile blackmail and the rough diplomacy which we may expect to encounter in our subsequent relations with the U.S.S.R."

Taylor said that since World War II there have been 15 limited wars and that the Russians or their allies have taken part in eight of them.

AMS Discusses Satellite Problems

Meteorological information obtained from artificial satellites and the problems of getting it were related here yesterday at the 161st national meeting of the American Meteorological Society.

Speakers were William K. Widger Jr. and C. N. Touart, geophysics research directorates, Air Force Cambridge Research Center, Bedford, Mass.

The most important information obtainable from such satellites, the scientists felt, would be observations of the amount of solar energy absorbed and re-radiated by the earth and its atmosphere, and cloud observations in oceanic regions where meteorological reports are few and far between.

"Severe problems must be solved before the data can be recovered," they said. "The position and orientation of the satellite must be known before some types of observations can be used."

They pointed out that several of the satellites expected to be launched by the United States during the International Geophysical Year will probably be equipped for making meteorological observations.

The violent Dallas tornado of this year was described by five other top scientists during the AMS meeting.

Participants saw the best of 450 black and white photos, 250 color slides and about 1,500 feet of movie film taken of the tornado. Pictures were taken from almost all angles, showing the tornado throughout its active period.

Walter H. Hoecker Jr. of the U. S. Weather Bureau, Washington, D. C., described measurements of the size and movements of the major twister and also of an immature tornado which was observed during the same day.

Other speakers who talked in the big storm were Stuart G. Bigler of the Oceanography and Meteorology Department; D. T. Williams and R. G. Beebe both of the U. S. Weather Bureau, Kansas City, Mo., and E. P. Segner Jr. of the Civil Engineering Department.

Meetings of the AMS will continue through Friday, with material presented on a wide variety of meteorological subjects.

At a banquet tonight, special awards will be presented to individuals and organizations who recently have completed outstanding work in the field of meteorology.

Blind Civil War Vet Has 115th Birthday

HOUSTON, Tex. (AP) — White-haired Walter Williams, one of the two remaining Civil War veterans, celebrated his 115th birthday yesterday.

Williams, who has always loved music, had a Western band playing at his home for his birthday. No big celebration was planned but friends dropped by during the day for cake and punch.

The Confederate veteran is three years older than John Salling of Slant, Va., the only other living Civil War veteran who is also a Confederate.

Williams' second wife died of a heart attack Nov. 2 at the age of 84, and he has not been told. A daughter, Mrs. Willie Mae Bowles, in whose home Williams lives, said she has postponed telling her father because of the effect the news might have.
