Forced Honor?

Despite strong sentiment against the proposed Corps Honor Code, Corps seniors seem determined to ram it down the throats of underclassmen.

They have entirely ignored pleas that the whole student body be included in the honor system.

Instead, they plan to virtually force the proposed code on the Corps by so-called indoctrination.

For the good of A&M, it might be well if these determined men stopped and considered the merits of a school-wide code planned by representatives from all classes, both Corps and Civilian.

It has seemed to be a habit among Corps leaders to rush into and try to force measures on the students. They probably have what they think are the best interests of the school at heart. But for a truly workable system of any kind, definite long-range planning plus careful consideration by all parties involved is necessary.

Continued attempts to completely ignore the Civilian student body are beginning to become obnoxious to some on the campus.

Corps leaders must plan to include the Civilian students in the Honor Code and in any other systems proposed in the future. They are going to be around for a lot longer than some would expect.

It is probably well to bring out again that with adoption of the proposed Corps Honor Code, Civilian students would indirectly be submitted to questions of honor because they are not part of the system.

Opponents must take immediate action to stop the indoctrination by Corps leaders and call for a referendum vote.

In any planning for A&M's future, the whole student body has got to be consulted for there are some who would fight to the last for the rights of all Aggies, Corps and Civilian.

Letters to the Editor

Editor:
The Battalion

We girls here at Sam Houston State Teachers College want to express our feelings toward the school we think so grand. We are behind that Fightin' Texas Aggie team all the way.

Rice Stadium was the only place tears were shed last Saturday afternoon. There were many shed by the girls watching the game on television. Even though we were not fortunate enough to attend the game, we felt that we were still a part of that wonderful 12th Man.

The dorm in which we girls live has posters throughout it supporting the Aggies and we wish them all the luck in the world on Turkey Day. We feel sure that the Fightin' Texas Aggies will come through with flying colors.

We will all be supporting that wonderful group of men, because we love and cherish the wonderful Spirit of Aggieland and all it represents.

A group of loyal Aggie fans from SHSTC

4-Corps Honor Code

Honor Council Outlined

(Editor's Note: Following is the fourth in a series of articles on the proponents' interpretation of the Corps Honor Code.)

The Honor Council

It is the purpose of the Honor Council to provide life to the Honor Code for the Corps of Cadets. The Honor Council shall consist of one first classman from each battalion and group.

The election shall be held at the end of each school year in accordance with established parliamentary procedure. Exact date will be designated by the chairman of the Honor Council.

The Honor Council will review all cases pertaining to honor violations and will judge innocence or guilt of person or persons involved.

Each member of the Honor Council will serve as chairman of a group or battalion Board of Review and is directly responsible for the orientation of the members of his battalion or group to the principles of honor.

A representative to the Honor Council must be willing to give wholehearted support to the Honor Code. He must consider the success or failure of the Honor system his personal responsibility. This job cannot be delegated.

Chairman of the Honor Council will be selected by newly elected Honor Council members of the Corps junior class plus one junior from each wing and regimental staff along with one from the Corps Staff.

The representatives of the five staffs will not serve on the council unless as chairmen. The selection procedure will consist of interviews by the Honor Council aiding the final selection.

Any vacancy created by appointment of chairman or otherwise will be filled by election at the battalion or group level.

Chairman of the Honor Council and its members are directly charged with the life of the Honor Code in the Corps of Cadets. Each member must be willing to strive for the ultimate of honor and integrity for every member of the Corps of Cadets. Honor among members of the Corps is not something that is convenient
