More Big Votes

Yesterday's big turnout in the co-education referendum points to the tremendous interest created by the issue and the students' desire to express opinions.

More big votes in every election are needed if students are really to get the right type leaders and representatives elected and voice opinions on issues such as the one yesterday.

Undoubtedly, if more Aggies would turn out for elections consistently there would be less griping about election outcomes. The man who doesn't vote has little right to gripe but he's usually the one who gripes most.

Persons voted yesterday who have probably never voted at A&M. There should never be an instance on the campus where a man has never voted.

More elections and possibly referendums may be held before the year is over. Keep up the large turnouts and the result will be better campus leaders and more accurate feeling on campus issues.

Letters To The Editor

Editor, The Battalion:

Since the question of co-education at Texas A&M has arisen, we would like to voice the opinion of many coeds here at SMU.

The spirit shown by the men at Texas A&M is unparalleled to the spirit found in any other school in the Southwest Conference. This essence is reflected in every phase of a cadet's life—spiritually and socially.

To attend any activity at Aggie land is to experience something new and different from the routine of a co-educational school. The manners and attentiveness shown by an Aggie are refreshing to the girls who are taken for granted by the boys in a co-educational school.

The heritage of which A&M is so proud must never die. Its traditions must remain for all future generations!

SMU Coeds

fact that a lot of people have forgotten about! It is the fact that there are not any facilities at A&M at the present time to handle women. Co-education cannot and will not come about over night. It is clear to everyone except a few that A&M is headed for co-education.

Co-education will start with the wives of Aggies attending. Then it will enlarge to include girls from Bryan and College Station. This process will not and cannot take place overnight.

The Corps yells that it will hurt "them." It is impossible for anything to hurt the Corps! The Corps has hurt A&M! We have held steady on enrollment while other schools have gained. Is this in the best interest of A&M? The Corps wants to do what is right for A&M, don't they? Or do they?

One Corps sophomore has said that he is against co-education because girls would study more and ruin the curve. College is a place where you may go to get a higher form of education, and not have one handed to you on a silver platter. A&M already has a high scholastic rating, and, if girls will cause us to study more, then we will raise the already high standard of A&M higher. Or perhaps the Corps is afraid that they will have to settle down and do some studying instead of "toughening" the fish.

True, a lot of the old traditions will have to go. But they will be replaced by a lot of new ones that Aggies can and will hold as dear to them as some of the old ones are today.

Oh! I know that Highway 6 runs both ways, so do a lot of other highways so how about taking one of them!

Keep up the good work of presenting all of the facts and not just what the Corps, or any other group would like to have published.

A true Aggie
