1,500 Firemen to Invade Campus for School Sunday

Nine Courses To Be Taught During Five-Day Training

An expected 1,500 firemen and fire marshals will start arriving on the campus Sunday to register for the five-day 29th annual Firemen's Training School to be held here Monday through Friday under the auspices of the State Firemen's and Fire Marshals' Association and the Engineering Extension Service.

During the week, classes will be held in nine phases connected with fire fighting for students from some 425 Texas cities, industries, other states and Army, Air Force and Navy installations, according to H. D. Smith, chief of the school.

With classes being held in various buildings over the campus, fire fighting demonstrations will be confined to a 26-acre tract north of College View.

All equipment and fuels used in the school have been donated by cities, the United States government and private firms and individuals, said Smith.

During the school some $60,000 worth of supplies will be used as well as 36,000 gallons of diesel, gasoline, oil and jet fuel in demonstrations.

The nine courses include an advanced and a primary general course; an advanced and a primary fire marshals' course; a firemen's instructor course; a fire officer's course; an industrial fire protection course; a fire pump maintenance course; and an armed services fire protection course;

A special course on the effects and damage of radioactivity will be conducted in conjunction with the fire marshals' course, said Smith.

More than 200 instructors, the top men in all phases of firefighting, will be here to teach the courses, Smith added.

In conjunction with the school, a short training film, the first of a proposed series, on how to attack fires in the average home has been prepared for use in fire departments throughout the state, said Smith.

The film, in color, is for instructional use with 20 copies being available for use.

The school begins with registration Sunday with actual work beginning Monday and lasting through Friday.

Drop Expected In GI Enrollment

Estimated veteran enrollment for the fall semester of 1958 will drop below that of 1957 by about 260 men, according to Bennie Zinn, Veterans Advisor.

Zinn said the main reasons for the decrease is that many veterans are not familiar with the stipulations of the G. I. Bill and do not know that they must enroll in school within a period of three years, after their separation date from the service.

A veteran must have completed his college work within seven years after separation date in order to receive full benefit of the bill, he said.

To qualify for full benefit under the Korean G. I. Bill, a person must have been on active duty on or before Jan. 31, 1955, he said.

Brief Filed In Coed Suit

A&M should not be changed from its present all-male status to a co-educational institution by courts, but only by the state legislature, Attorney General Will Wilson said in a brief filed in the 10th Court of Civil Appeals in Waco Friday.

The brief was filed appealing the ruling of Judge W. T. McDonald of Bryan who ruled in his 85th District Court that two women, Mrs. Lena Bristol and Mrs. Barbara Tittle, could attend A&M.

The two women filed suit against the college after they were refused the right to register for the 1958 spring semester.

Neither of the two women attended the first session of summer school.

In his brief, Wilson contends the United States Supreme Court has held that classification by sexes is a state power. Under this ruling, Wilson wrote, the A&M Board of Directors has legislative authority to set admission standards and has decided against allowing women to enroll. He also said that A&M was set up primarily as a school for men as it does not offer courses appealing to women.

"By concentrating upon areas of instruction of primary interest to only one of the sexes, an institution is able to advance the quality and effectiveness of instruction in these areas, which is more difficult to achieve when the institution must seek to fill the varied academic needs of both sexes," the brief said.

"Thus an institution is able to focus its total energy on the education of one sex without being distracted by any possible difference between men and women in the process of education."

"The judgement of the trial court finds support in neither the statutes nor the constitution of this state or of the United States Constitution," the brief continued.

Continuing the brief said, "The action involves questions of the policy affecting the government of A&M and the place of the college in the state's system of higher education. Such questions are properly addressed to the legislature and not to the judiciary."

Wilson said the state has made sufficient provision for educating both sexes in the 18 state-supported colleges. Viewed as a whole, the system does not discriminate.

Then added, "Each institution, including Texas A&M and Texas Woman's University, is a mere part of the whole system, the distinctive contribution of each part composing the accomplishments of the whole."

Wilson said the court also erred in holding that exclusion of women violated their constitutional rights.

Arguments on the case are expected to be heard in the Waco court in September.

The women cannot enroll in a long semester pending the hearing.

New Building To Be Almost Ready for Use

Two floors of the new wing on the Chemistry Building will be ready for use by the time school starts, said Dr. A. F. Isbell, chairman of the building committee.

Remaining floors will be finished about one month after school starts and will have nine offices and private labs for professors, graduate student labs for about 60 students, and some special labs, he said.

The cost of the new wing will be approximately $1,303,000. This includes building, $1,009,000; furniture, $219,000; and special equipment, $75,000.

Registration Time Again

John Perry, mechanical engineering graduate student, left, signs up for a modern language course from E. C. Breitenkamp in Monday's registration for the second summer session. With no official figures available until tomorrow morning as registration continues through 5 p. m. today, a drop was expected from the record 2,520 enrolled for the first summer session.
