Aggie to Star In Major TV

Orison (Ty Hardin) Hungerford, '57 has been chosen by Warner Brothers to play the role of Bronco Layne in "Cheyenne", a television program to be seen this fall on a major network.

Hungerford entered A&M in September 1954, and left in the spring of 1957 needing only one more semester to graduate. He majored in electrical engineering.

The 28-year-old Aggie was signed by Paramount last Nov. 4—four days after he wandered into a talent scout's office looking for a pair of six-guns to rent for a costume party.

Hungerford moved to Texas as a baby and attended schools in Austin and Houston. He attended Blinn College before joining the army in 1950.

He has had minor parts in five movies, three brief scenes in a "Playhouse 90" drama and a day as a male model on "Queen for a Day."

He will replace Clint (Cheyenne Bodie) Walker, former star of the show, who resigned.

going to the games rather than encourage them."

Rudder explained another change in effect this year: that of having Military Science (Army ROTC) on a general curriculum plan rather than the more specialized fields of former semesters. The new rule puts all Army cadets, except present seniors, in a course with emphasis on leadership training as such, rather than instruction in special weapons or fields of the Army branch.

He gave three reasons for the shift. First, the Department of the Army requested it; second, as an Army reserve officer commander, he saw that general curriculum-trained officers were better qualified; and third, Summer Training Unit records showed that these men are superior to those trained in specialized fields.

Pointing out the administration was doing what it thought was best for the college, Rudder said: "I hope it will never be necessary for you to question our integrity as to what we are doing."

He closed his address by saying: "We are pledging our support in making this the finest Corps of Cadets A&M ever had. We are asking your support to have the largest Corps ever at Final Review."

Visitors will be received at the Highway Research Center and guided through the various laboratories, some of which are in other buildings of the civil engineering area.

The open house activities will provide an opportunity for the citizens of Texas and various interested organizations and transportation agencies to become more familiar with the operations of the institute, according to Charles P. Hirsch, arrangements chairman, and his committee composed of T. J. Hirsch and C. R. Hanning.

Members of the staff will be available to explain and discuss the various projects with all interested visitors. Other highlights

The institute is a part of the Bureau of Public Roads, which has more than three million dollars in research funds available for the study of the system.

The institute's program is divided into three general fields: engineering and construction, and operations and maintenance. The institute's research is carried on in the highway department of the institute. Other highlights

Education Group To Release Report

AUSTIN—AP—The Texas Commission on Higher Education is scheduled to release this week a controversial staff report on the role and scope of the 18 tax supported colleges and universities.

"None of the institutions will agree with the overall report," predicted a commission member, who asked not to be identified. "The staff report is too negative and does not take a positive view on how to improve higher education."

The Legislature-created commission met in executive session for about an hour at Monday's special meeting. It did not approve or disapprove the report by its staff, a spokesman said.

Executive Director Ralph Green said, "There are a lot of viewpoints on this report. We've been trying to find a common ground on which the commission can agree."

The role and scope of each institution, as defined by the commission, would be used in preparation of budgets and courses of study. Its aim would be to improve instruction with financial economy and is predicted to produce far-reaching results.
