Hogs Edge Cadets, 72-71, With Basket After Buzzer

More than 10,000 eyes were glued on a basketball circling crazily on the rim of the basket Saturday night before the stillness which had persisted in White Coliseum for a few long seconds was shattered by two very audible sounds.

One was the harsh buzzer blaring above the red lights on the scoreboard, denoting that the game was over.

The other was the sudden outburst of the partisan A&M crowd as the ball plunked through the net after the buzzer sounded, giving Arkansas a 72-71 triumph over the Aggies.

Eight seconds earlier A&M's Jack Collier had dumped his lone field goal of the night into the basket and pulled the crowd to its feet with the points that placed the Farmers one mark ahead of the determined Razorbacks.

Harry Thompson brought the ball back onto the court for Arkansas as over 5,000 fans held their breath and watched the seconds tick away on the great clock high above the middle of the court.

Four seconds remained in the game as Thompson took aim on the basket and let go a long jump shot that hit the rim and ricocheted high into the air. It looked like A&M had another ball game but the Razorbacks' Jay Carpenter leaped high and tipped the ball back towards the basket.

Then after making like a Sputnik for brief seconds it dropped from its orbit into the basket. The referees ruled that the ball was in the air before the buzzer sounded, giving the Hogs two points and the victory.

At the start of the game it looked like the Aggies would run wild. Wilmer Cox hit his first five tries from the side and the Aggies, who led for the first 36 minutes of play, scored in flourishes, leading the visitors by as many as 11 points shortly after intermission. But the taller Razorbacks fought back and knotted the count with 4:01 remaining.

After six quick points on the hook shots of sophomore Pat Foster, the Arkansas squad held a 68-64 lead. Thompson tipped one in for the Hogs to make it 70-66 before a layup and a free toss by the Aggies' Neil Swisher narrowed the gap to one point.

Then came the four seconds of defeat for the Cadets.

All in all, the game was a repeat of one played in Arkansas in January but this time the shoe was on the other foot. In that hair-raiser, the Aggies went ahead 63-62 with 10 seconds left and guarded their lead for the win.

The loss dropped the Aggies into a tie with Arkansas in fifth place, both with 5-6 conference marks.

The Razorbacks hit 35 per cent of their shots in the first half and then steadied to end up with a 43.8 percentage from the floor. A&M hit 43.7 for the game.
