

41st Annual Water Conference Over 800 People Attend Water Meet

The 41st Texas Water and Sewage Works Association's short course, which began its six day meeting Sunday, is still under way in the Memorial Student Center.

This group is meeting jointly with the Texas Bottled Water Association. The joint associations are second only to the highway short course. Over 800 people are attending the meeting.

Sam L. Warrington of Austin, chairman of the program committee for the sewage meeting, said they have been gathering here annually since 1936. The instructors are from state and national health departments, the Engineering Extension Service here, and from experienced operators throughout the nation, according to Warrington.

The Bottled Water Association, jointly meeting with the water and sewage group, is the oldest such organization and has grown to national proportion, having 13 states and Mexico represented, according to A. D. Martin, Jr., of Dallas, president of the association.

The short course is being presented in a seven-phase program. An instrument course, a swimming pool operation course, sewage, water, and industrial and bottled water courses are being covered in the meetings.

Two awards were made yesterday for distinguished service to the water and sewage works profession.

Mrs. Earl H. Goodwin of Austin was awarded an honorary life membership in the Texas Water and Sewage Works Association. J. P. Burden, city engineer for the City of San Angelo, received the same honor for his services to his city.

Both sections are discussing items of interest, instruction, advancements, and future problems.

Commenting on the location of the meeting, Martin said, "We love it here because we have perfect accommodations, and the MSC is a fine location for it."

Mechanical Meet Starts Tomorrow

Final preparations were being made today for the 10th annual A&M-Texas Press Association Mechanical Conference which will be held in the Memorial Student Center tomorrow and Saturday.

Included on the agenda will be photo workshops, photography coaching, and photography and mechanical discussion groups, a suppliers' barbecue and a tour of A&M Press, visual aids laboratory and student publication facilities.

Invitations have been sent to all deans and department heads, inviting them, their faculty and students to attend the conference, according to Wesley D. Calvert, conference director.

All students are invited to attend the conference, but are asked to register at the conference registration desk to insure an accurate count at the session, Calvert said.

Those who want to attend the photo shooting sessions tomorrow afternoon, however, must bring a camera and intend to shoot pictures to be admitted, he said.

Only paid conferees will be awarded door prizes, Calvert added.

The suppliers' barbecue will be restricted to conferees and journalism students, but students are welcome to attend the photography discussion at 7:30 p.m. on the ground floor of Nagle Hall.

'Shacks' Culprits Find Things Heavy

A "Shack" in "Splinter Village" was broken into Tuesday night, but culprits failed to find anything small enough to carry away except a set of keys.

Campus Security investigated the incident Wednesday morning but found nothing missing except the keys to the classrooms.

Major Roger A. McCauley, Assistant professor of Air Science, said the incident may have been just a practical joke since the keys were all that was taken from the building.

"Some cadet may have wanted a personal key to his classroom and took the opportunity to get one," McCauley said.

Horton Smith and Byron Nelson have played 21 times in the Masters golf tournament.
