Rain Halts Spring Grid Drills With 20 Days Left for Windup

By BOB WEEKLEY
Battalion Sports Editor

Rain brought a temporary halt to the Aggie spring training football drills yesterday after five actual days of practice under sunny skies. Three days have been missed now due to rain and intended lay-off.

The Farmers now have only 20 days remaining in which to work in 18 days of practice. Under Southwest Conference rules a team may have 18 days on the practice field with a 10-day grace period to make up for rain, layoffs, etc.

Coach Jim Myers put his charges through blackboard drills yesterday pouring over offensive and defensive plays and formations.

Compared to last year, injuries are down to a minimum with no serious injuries being sustained by the players. Fullback Gordon LeBoeuf had a knee twisted while Jim Murphy had several stitches taken in his chin. But besides these only bruises and minor cuts have marred practice.

Returning lettermen from last season still lead the candidates for the first string positions but sophomores are starting to push their older counterparts for the coveted roles.

Charley Milstead leads backfield candidates in the multiple offense formations at the quarterback position, trailed by Powell Berry, a prospective junior from Snyder. Both athletes are lettermen under Myers' single wing.

Fullbacks are led by the injured LeBoeuf and Murphy. Murphy, Franklin Fisher and Bob Lindley, the other fullbacks, are all sophomores.

The least experienced position in the backfield is left half, but the talent there could more than make up for the lack of experience. Jon Few in holding down the starting role at present but is closely trailed by Jesse McGuire and Rodgers McFarland, both standouts on the freshman squad last season.

Probably the team's most reliable receiver stands forth at right half, the sticky-fingered Randy Sims. Behind Sims, a starter last season, are Eddie Van Dyke, Calvin Janner and Gary Finch.

In the line the biggest problem centers on ends and tackles. Ralph Smith and Jack Estes have the nod right now but James Street, a ferocious defensive end on the freshman squad, Travis Nevill and Richard Love could move up several notches.

Gale Oliver, a center converted to tackle, and Bill Darwin, a 207-pound, two-year lettermen, have experience at that position. Robert Garner, Bill Godwin and George Gray are other lettermen who could strengthen that position while John Stradinger and Bill Vincent, up from the freshman team, could move into a starting role.

Both starters return from the guard slots last season, Allen Goehring and Carter Franklin. Wayne Labar, a blocking back converted back to the guard position, Joe Munson and Buddy Payne are all lettermen who keep the problem slight here.

Roy Northrup appears irreplaceable at center and is ably backed up by Daryle Keeling and squadman Paul Piper. Keeling is up from the freshman team where he was a blocking back.

Spring training will be climaxed by an intra-squad game April 18 when two teams composed of the maroon and white squads will kick off and face each other as an added attraction for high school day.

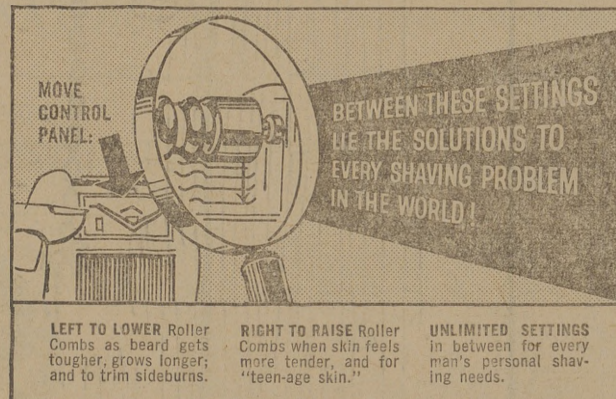

Milstead Leads Backfield Candidates

Charley Milstead, the triple threat mainstay of the Aggie squad last season, is the outstanding prospect for quarterback on Coach Jim Myers new multiple offense formation.
