The interior of the new B&CU Building, to be finished early in June, begins to take shape. The building is part of the colleges' 10 year plan which includes a new Agriculture Extension and a homemaking building.

$507,000 B & C U Building To Be Finished in Early June

The new $507,000 Building and College Utilities building is scheduled to be finished sometime in early June, according to W. Howard Badgett, manager of the A&M Physical Plant.

"The B&CU building is just a part of the college's 10 year plan which also includes a new Agriculture Extension and homemaking building and a Nuclear Science Building," said Badgett. The program is headed by J. H. Walker, manager of the A&M System Physical Plants.

Located behind the old B&CU building and the U.S. Post Office, the buildings are spread out over 47,160 square feet and will house a freight receiving station, paint and carpenters shop, electrical shop, general maintenance shop, plumbing shop, fire station and new B&CU office.

"It still does not take care of all of our needs but it is a long way from the old buildings, the first of which was built in 1904 at a cost of $3,000," said Badgett.

"The main office will be air conditioned and we will receive some new machinery to replace the old antiquated machines as well as better sheet metal equipment," Badgett said.

Badgett said the "10 year plan" also includes the addition of a trickling filter and a final clarifier for the sewage disposal plant.

The new fire station will contain a fire hose drier which will save time drying the hoses and will help preserve them.

The old B&CU shacks will be torn down and all that will be left is the building which now contains the fire station, B&CU office and the paint and carpenter shop.
