

Lead CHS Yells

Yell Practice Appearance

Myers Hopes for Impressive Performance in East Lansing

Jim Myers, coach of the Aggie gridgers, made his initial appearance this year before the A&M student body last night at a Yell Practice in The Grove.

The young mentor, speaking on the eve of the Cadets departure by air for Michigan, expressed hope for an impressive showing by the Ags Saturday in East Lansing against the Spartans of Michigan State University.

Also on the program were Tom Chandler, coach of the Southwest Conference Champion Aggie baseballers last spring and the football team members.

Myers told the student body that it was a long way to Michigan. He added, however, that he was going back to the vicinity of his previous locale and was seeking a good performance there.

"It's a good distance up there," he stated, "but they're Yankees and we're Southerners."

"And you know what Southerners think of Yankees," he added.

"We're not going up there just for the trip," he proclaimed. "We plan to play some football."

Chandler told the assembly he had never seen a coaching staff and team members work as diligently as the Aggies had this fall.

Myers introduced Charley Milstead, captain and tailback-quarterback in the Farmers multiple offense, and Gale Oliver, alternate captain and tackle from Refugio. Milstead introduced the backs and ends to the student body and Oliver handled the ceremonies for the linemen.

Following the introduction, the pair expressed appreciation to the gathering for the help of the Twelfth Man and the support given the team.

"We're going to try and avoid another disappointment as experienced last week in Dallas," said Milstead. "We plan to go up to Michigan and play some football for a change."

"We'd like to thank the Twelfth Man for the support given last week," he continued.

Oliver, following Milstead, also told the student body that the team appreciated the support of the students.

"I'm not much at making speeches," he stated, "but it sure feels good to know the Aggie Band is in the stands along with the students."

"If you do your part, we'll try to do ours and not have any disappointments as last weekend." "We know that registration and all was going on, but those that made the trip sure helped," he added.

"It's too bad that students can't make the trip to Michigan this weekend," he concluded.

The Aggies leave tomorrow by air for the game and return Sunday. It is State's season opener, tabbed "High School Day" at the vast arena in East Lansing where high school bands throughout the Midwest will participate in the half time performance.

"Tip On a Dead Jockey" will be shown by the Memorial Student Center Film Society at 7:45 p.m. in the MSC Ballroom.

Previously scheduled to be shown was the Cinemascope production, "The Hunters." A hold up in production of the special Cinemascope camera lens will necessitate substitutes for the first three Cinemascope films scheduled, according to Ed Saenz, committee chairman.

The Cinemascope screen has already been installed and the only hold up is production and shipping of the lens from the factory.

Saenz said the lens should arrive in several weeks. A new schedule will be announced as soon as the lens arrives.

Civilians Seek Change In A&M Registration

Texas Tech Plan Approved at CSC

Registration and Kyle Field seating headed the discussion last night at the semester's first meeting of the Civilian Student Council in the Social Room of the Memorial Student Center.

A plan for more effective and time saving registration was brought up at the meeting by Charles Graham, president of the council. He pointed out the various faults of the present method of registration at A&M, called on Representative Jim Hall to explain the method currently used at Texas Tech.

Hall, a graduate of Texas Tech and a student of veterinary medicine at A&M, explained the method called "pre-registration."

Under this system registration or "pre-registration" at A&M would be conducted the week before finals with freshmen and transfer students registering at the regular time.

In case students happen to fail certain courses after having registered during the week before finals, those necessary changes could be made with the freshmen and transfer students. Fees would be paid last, Hall said.

Hall said the system has worked most effectively at Tech and explained that Tech enrolls a lot more students than does A&M.

A majority of the councilmen were in favor of such a system at registration after discussing the various problems experienced at registration here last week.

Robert R. Murray Jr., Civilian Student Council sponsor, told the councilmen that they would have to have an academic person from the college to help them get such a plan of registration passed.

"Without an academic person to back us up," Murray said, "we are wasting our time."

Hall said that he had talked with Dr. Edgar D. McMurry of the Department of Veterinary Physiology and Pharmacology and said McMurry seemed to be in favor of the "pre-registration" plan.

Graham then appointed a Registration Committee consisting of Hall, chairman; Jim Beal, Russell Niesing and Jim Grouch. He also placed McMurry on the committee.

The need of ushers was the biggest problem concerning the seating plan. Ushers are needed at the home football games to keep the civilian students from sitting in the seats reserved for the Corps, Graham said.

Murray pointed out that "if no ushers are present, our boys get the seats reserved for the Corps while the Corps is marching in to

CHS Majorettes

These five majorettes will lead the A&M Consolidated High School Band at halftime ceremonies tonight when the Consolidated Tigers entertain the undefeated and once tied Hearne Eagles. The Tigers currently have a 1-2 record. Judy Rasmussen, back row center, is drum major for the band and a senior at the school. Kneeling are junior majorettes Patricia Callahan, left, and Mary Gould. Flanking Miss Rasmussen on the left is senior head twirler Janis Gard and on the right is sophomore Carolyn Brazzel.

Methodists Plan Leadership School Starting Oct. 4

A leadership training course will begin at the A&M Methodist Church on Sunday morning, Oct. 4.

This course is sponsored by the Commission on Education of the A&M Methodist Church and is to be offered for 11 consecutive Sunday mornings during the regular church school hour which begins at 9:50 a.m.

Jack Kent, chairman of the Commission on Education, says that the purpose of this course is to aid in preparing prospective teachers and workers in the educational work of the church.

The course will be taught by a select group of instructors, with each instructor teaching one unit of instruction.

Dr. Earl Knebel and Dr. W. O. Trogdon are serving as co-chairmen in directing the leadership training course.

An appreciation dinner for present church school teachers and workers and a "Kick-off Dinner" for those planning to participate in this leadership training course will be held as a joint affair at the Memorial Student Center Wednesday night. There will be no charge for the dinner.

Ags Underdogs Against State

By BOB WEEKLEY
Battalion Sports Editor

The Aggies, their hopes of a winning season dimmed by an upstart Texas Tech eleven last Saturday, donned their traveling clothes this morning and boarded the plane for East Lansing and their date with the Michigan State Spartans.

This time the Aggies will be back in their old, familiar role of underdog with slim chance of pulling an upset over the rugged State eleven. Experts are picking the Spartans a solid two touchdown favorite over the Aggies and the odds should rise before Saturday rolls around.

Michigan State will be opening their bid to move back into football prominence and plan to do it at the lightweight Aggies expense. The Spartans posted a dismal 3-5-1 record in a hectic season last year that saw Head Coach Duffy Daugherty receive the dubious honor of being hanged in effigy.

Some light has shined into the Farmers' camp this week with the return of the perennially injured Jon Few, the highly touted junior who has not yet been well enough to strut his stuff. Flicking the switch on the bright light is the slowly improving Randy Sims, injured in the Texas Tech contest. Sims is listed as "doubtful" for the game.

Two promotions have resulted in the Aggie camp this past week. Sophomore Jesse McGuire raced into a starting halfback position, thanks to his brilliant showing against the Red Raiders, and Bob Phillips replaced Jack Estes at end.

McGuire, as flashy a back as the Southwest Conference has seen in years, will face his trial by fire this weekend as he attempts to prove to the Cadet coaching staff that his 149 yards gained rushing last week was no mere fluke. Against the Michigan State line, he could well be facing a final examination.

Weight will be the problem the Farmers will have to overcome if they expect to win the contest. The Spartans' heavy beef up front averages out at 210 pounds per man and their smallest player, an end by the innocent sounding name of Brandstatter, is as large as the Aggies' biggest player, 207 pounds.

Daugherty's razzle dazzle offense has baffled the Aggies in practice this past week, and his team holds promise of doing the same come game time. The Spartans will play platoon-type ball this year and have two first string units. . . one to specialize on offense and the other on defense.

The Michigan State coach has enough athletes left over from the first two units to form a third string, somewhat on the order of LSU's Chinese Bandits. Anything the first two units can't take care of they guarantee to solve.

Owls Wish Cadets

Victory Over State

A wire received from the Rice Institute Student Body early this morning wished the Ags well in their clash with Michigan State Saturday.

It read:

Best of Luck in your forthcoming game with Michigan State. The Owls are behind you all the way.

Tuesday Hearing Set for Chest Drive

A public hearing by the College Station United Chest Committee will be held Tuesday at 7:30 in the A&M Consolidated High School Cafeteria, J. B. "Dick" Hervey, general chairman, said today.

Agencies desiring to be included in this year's United Chest budget are requested to be present for a presentation of their requests, Hervey stated.

"Because an agency was included last year does not mean the same agency will be included automatically this year," Hervey pointed out.

"The Chest Committee will hear all applications Tuesday night and at a subsequent meeting work out the budget for the 1959 drive," he said. It is expected that each agency will have a representative or committee present for the hearing.

The College Station United Chest

drive for funds will be conducted Nov. 1-15, with E. L. Angell chairing the college drive; H. E. Burgess in charge of the city campaign; and Irwin Lloyd will handle agencies.

Hervey thanked the College Station Chamber of Commerce for deferring its membership drive until after the United Chest effort. "This spirit of cooperation is greatly appreciated by the Chest," Hervey said.

Last year 14 agencies participated in the chest with a budget of $13,727. The drive went over the goal.

"Through the College Station United Chest we have an opportunity to contribute only once a year to worthy causes. Through united and unselfish service we each have a part in making College Station a better community," Hervey said.
