Frosh Fighting for Positions; Face TCU Wogs October 8

Freshman Coach Tom Chandler sent his charges through a hard day of drills and scrimmage yesterday as he rushed to get his frosh ready for their October 8 date with the TCU Wogs.

Changes are still being made daily in the first two teams with no one man nailing down a cinch starting berth before game time.

Ronnie Brice, the Andrews flash, continues to lead the candidates for quarterback, while his running mates at the present time are halfbacks Bill Lager and Ronnie Ledbetter and Fullback Leeroy Caffey, a 6-3, 205 pounder from Thorndale.

Other members of the first eleven are Ends M. Davis and Don Ramsey; Tackles George Hogan and James Walton; Guards Jim Harper and James Phillips; and Center Jerry Hopkins.

The frosh this year could field one of the heaviest teams in the conference, and they should outweigh their upperclassmen by some 20 pounds. The seven named above average out at a 209 pound average. Largest men on the team are tackles Walton and Hogan, both men weighing at 225.

Tommy Janik is quarterbacking the second unit. Halfbacks are Jon Mason and Eddie Dolezal while the fullback is Sam Byer.

Ends are Bill Sanders and Bobby Huntington; Tackles Alan Huggins and Hubert Wilson; Guards Stuart Beebe and Walter LaGrone; and Center Alex Cortese.

Cotton Bowl Group Eyes S W C Teams

DALLAS—No group of football fans will be watching the impending Southwest Conference gridiron championship race with more interest than the 38 men who make up the board of directors of the Cotton Bowl Athletic Assn.

The conference champion, of course, automatically becomes the host team for the New Year's Day Cotton Bowl Classic, which is the official Southwest Conference post-season bowl game.

In addition to their natural interest in the outcome of the race because of the Cotton Bowl affiliation, the majority of the CBAA directors will have a more personal reason to keep tabs on the conference football warfare.

This is because 32 of the 38 directors were placed on the board by the seven Southwest Conference schools now competing for the football championship. Texas Tech does not compete in football until 1960. Most of the CBAA directors are alumni or ex-students of the various conference institutions.

The make-up of the CBAA board underscores the close relationship of the Cotton Bowl classic to the conference and indicates how directly the bowl association is tied in with the institutions that make up the conference.

There are 24 CBAA institutional directors, three each from Arkansas, Baylor, Rice, SMU, Texas, A&M and TCU. There are also eight ex-officio directors, seven of whom are past presidents of the CBAA who were formerly institutional directors placed on the board by their schools. The eighth is the secretary-treasurer of the CBAA, who is also executive secretary of the Southwest Conference and was chosen by the conference schools.

The other six CBAA board members are custodial directors from the original group of Dallas civic leaders who started the Cotton Bowl game in 1937 and then turned it over to the Southwest Conference in 1940. Needless to say, they all follow football just as avidly as the other directors and have their own favorites among the conference teams.

The president of the Cotton Bowl Athletic Assn. is John B. Lowe, a Rice man. Robert B. Cullum is chairman of the board and was made a director by SMU. Roland Bond, first vice-president, was named by TCU, and Jay W. Dickey, second vice-president, by Arkansas.
