

Exchange Student Gets Carver Grant

Joseph Yen-Chu Chui, Chinese foreign student here from Hong Kong, is the recipient of a scholarship from Dr. David J. Carver, a graduate of the University of Richmond.

A Baltimore philanthropist who learned to love Chinese during the years he was in business importing ceramics to the United States is helping pay the education bills of fifteen Chinese students in American colleges and universities this session.

Five of them are attending the University of Richmond. Carver has set up a fund of $100,000—he may eventually raise it to $250,000—for the education of Chinese students. This fund—The David J. Carver, Jr. Memorial Fund, in memory of Dr. Carver's only son—was set up in the hope that it would help "establish in the world . . . the teachings of Jesus Christ."

Although he suggested that Baptist institutions be given first priority, he made it clear that he did not wish "denominational or other religious considerations" to restrict the use of the fund.

He stipulated that the fund was to be administered by Richmond.

Four of the five beneficiaries of the fund at the University are students in Westhampton College, women's undergraduate division and one, also a woman, is in the Graduate School. They are receiving grants ranging upward to $700. They are typical, says Dr. B. C. Holtzclaw, chairman of the scholarship committee at the university, of the fifteen who are sharing some $6,000 this year.

"They are without exception," he said, "eager to be of help to their people." Some of them plan to teach, all of them plan to return to their own people.

The Chinese have had no difficulty in fitting themselves into the student body. They find American girls "friendly and kind". They are a little amused at the way the Americans "go after their food with both hands", instead of the leisurely one-hand approach of the Chinese with chop-sticks.

In fact they are not so much amused as amazed by the hustle and rush of the Americans. "The pace tires me out," says Jean

Chou, now a senior, "but I like it."

The reference to Americans always being in a hurry brought a "that's for sure" from Waylai Ling of Formosa, a graduate student. She chuckled, realizing that the "that's for sure" was bona fide American slang. Miss Chou, a major in biology, plans a career as a laboratory technician; Miss Ling expects to be a teacher. She is doing her major work in psychology.

All of the Chinese girls had latched on to another American word, that was once listed as slang but has worked its way into the dictionary: "okay."

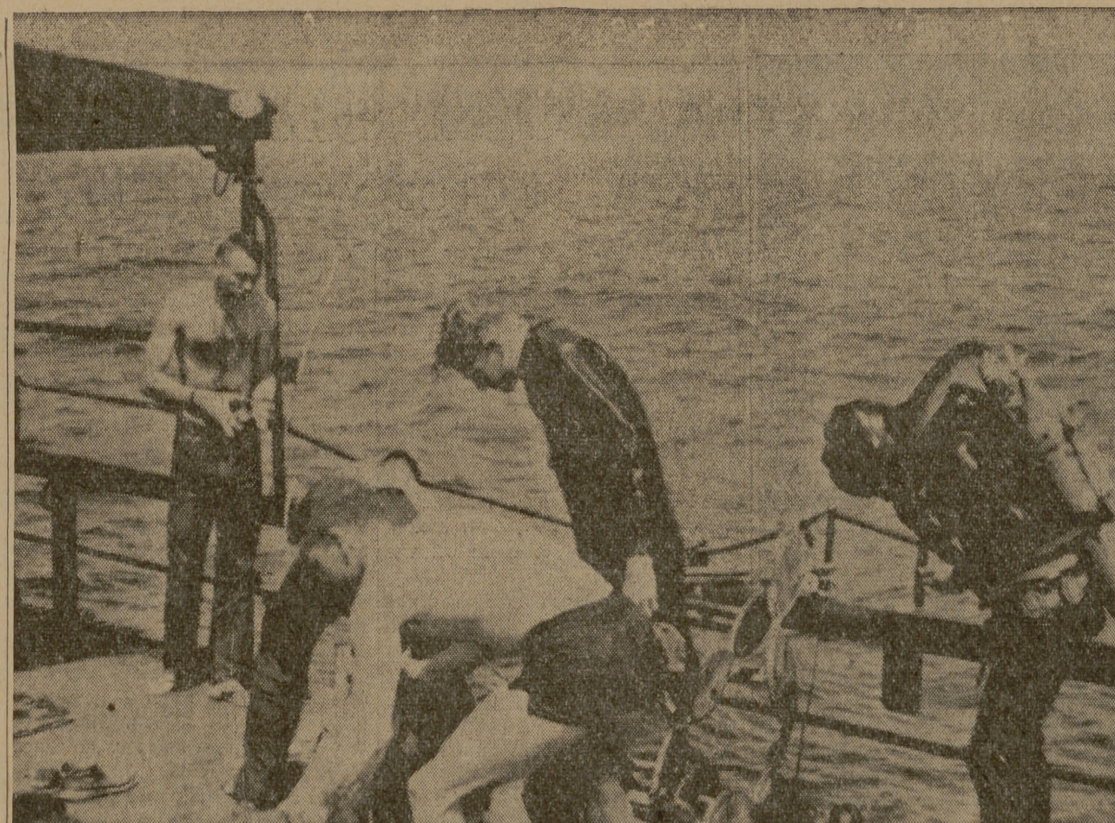

They found almost everything okay, particularly American motion pictures. And if they like something they like it "terribly". That's the way Miss Chou liked the movie "Waterloo Bridge". She liked fairly well, but "not terribly", another bridge picture, "The Bridge on the River Kwai."

Patricia Kwa whose major interest is psychology, intends to work with Chinese children. Then there's Shirley Lai, whose main interest is chemistry; Mee Han Chan, who is interested in hospital work.

All of the Chinese, with the exception of Miss Ling, call Hong Kong their home.

Dr. Holtzclaw feels that the devotion of these Chinese to education and to the welfare of their people "back home" is typical of those who are receiving help from the Carver Fund. They are Joseph Yen-Chun Chiu at A&M; Ruth Chou of the University of Tennessee; George Y. Hsu of Trinity University at San Antonio; Shou-be Kwang, University of California; John C. S. Kang, Bryn Mawr; Joseph Chieh and Samuel Sai-Chak Lee, Virginia Polytechnic Institute; Hong-Sun Liu, University of Washington; Joyce Chieh-Chun Tien, Massachusetts Institute of Technology, and Myriam Y. K. Yin, Peabody Conservatory.

Many of the students and in some cases their parents are personally known to Carver who spent four years as a teacher in China and made a dozen trips to the Orient over the period of 30 years he was in the import business.

SCUBA Deadline Set

Tonight at 7:30 is the deadline for registering for the SCUBA short course which is now in session.

The course will run for ten weeks, with meetings Wednesday nights from 7:30-9:30.

The completion of the course entitles the student to the use of college equipment and the opportunity to go on scheduled diving cruises on the college ship Hidalgo.

Neill Hitchcock, diving instructor and junior in electrical engineering, related a few of the crew's diving experiences in past cruises.

On the spring cruise last year, Hitchcock and his diving partner, Bill Green, senior electrical engineering major, were diving off Freeport. In about 60 feet of water Green speared a large fish.

"The last I saw of him, he was being towed away by the fish," said Hitchcock. "I looked for him for several minutes, and finally spotted him. The fish was resting."

He said he also speared the fish, and the Grouper towed both of them for about 11 minutes. Then the three of them, equally out of air, surfaced. But in the rough seas, they lost the fish trying to get him aboard the ship.

Another incident which proved humorous happened off Galveston. Green had begun to use a new underwater camera when Hitchcock noticed him groping around on the bottom. He managed to get the message from Green that he was looking for a lost flashlight.

"I almost lost my mouthpiece laughing," said Hitchcock. "Flash-bulbs float."

In addition to the fun of the Susan B. Anthony made her, "Oh Women's Right to Suffrage," in 1873. That same year she arrested for casting a vote in the presidential election.

Hill Recieves Leave To Teach at Texas

Dr. John Hugh Hill, professor of history, has been granted a leave of absence this year, according to Dr. J. M. Nance, head of the department of history and government, to teach at the University of Texas.

Professor Hill and his wife, Dr. Laurita Hill, have, through their historical publications, achieved recognition not only in this country but also in Europe. They recently received an invitation from the history department of the University of Toulouse to come there in the near future to continue their research on the Crusades in southern France.

During the past few years the Hills have co-authored several articles dealing with medieval life and particularly the Crusades. Their publications have appeared in various journals, including Speculum, American Historical Review, Mediaevalia et Humanistica, Annales du Midi (French), and an article has recently been accepted for publication by LeMoyen Age (Belgian). A more recent publication bringing them international distinction is a monograph, entitled Raymond IV de St. Gilles which has been translated into French and published under auspices of the Faculty of Letters of the University of Toulouse during the past summer.

The latter study began in 1942 as a dissertation under the supervision of Professor Frederic Ducul, medieval scholar at the University of Texas. The study soon drew the attention of A. N. J. Hollander, a Dutch scholar, who wrote in the American Quarterly that "when an individual notices with surprise, that a historian trained at the University of Texas as takes his doctor's degree there with a meritorious study of the European Middle Ages, then he must conclude (as one of my colleagues in Holland recently realized) that the image of this American state apparently needs revision."

"He then understands that his notion of the state in question, formed in school days by juveniles (themselves already behind the times) has not kept pace with reality."

At present the Hills are at work on the establishment of an 11th century text of a crusading history and its translations. They have been supported, in part, in this undertaking by grants from the American Philosophical Society, supplemented by a grant during the past summer from the Committee on the Development of Teaching Personnel here.

Lions View Cadet-State Grid Films

Topping the agenda Monday noon at the regular meeting of the College Station Lions Club in the Memorial Student Center was the showing of the Michigan State-Texas A&M football game held two weeks ago.

Capt. Phil Weihs, program chairman for this month, presented the film entertainment.

Preceding the film, Charles Cosper, secretary-treasurer of the club, announced plans for the coming Lions carnival to be held at Consolidated High School Oct. 17.
