More Improvement

The Class of '60 took action Wednesday to correct the sham of a Yell Practice that has in recent years been called Midnight Yell Practice.

The senior class has taken the initial step in returning Midnight Yell Practice to its old role as an important part of the Aggie Spirit.

Through the leadership and Spirit shown by the Class of '60, Midnight Yell Practice can once again become an Aggie tradition of which to be justly proud—not something to go to for laughs.

With the support of all the Men of Aggieland, the revised Midnight Yell Practice will once again be a place to take our dates and other campus visitors to show them the real Aggie Spirit.

Unity behind the move of the Class of '60 will mean the end to fables and jokes. In their place will come talks to build Aggie Spirit.

True, it is another change from the way things were, but like almost all the changes made this year, it's a move in the direction of making Texas A&M a better place to be or to be from.

Besides, the way things were wasn't so good. Each day brings more proof that the new way of doing things is reaping more and more benefits for Texas A&M and Aggies.

The success of the new Midnight Yell Practice, like all the improvements being made this year, depends upon how well the Men of Aggieland stand behind it.

With the help of all, it will work and another tradition will regain the stature it once held.

Grad Students Conduct Studies

Walter C. Biggs of Castle Hayne, N. C., and Walter V. Robertson of Malakoff, graduate students at A&M, are conducting studies on subjects under the direction of Dr. Richard J. Baldauf, associate professor in the Department of Wildlife Management.

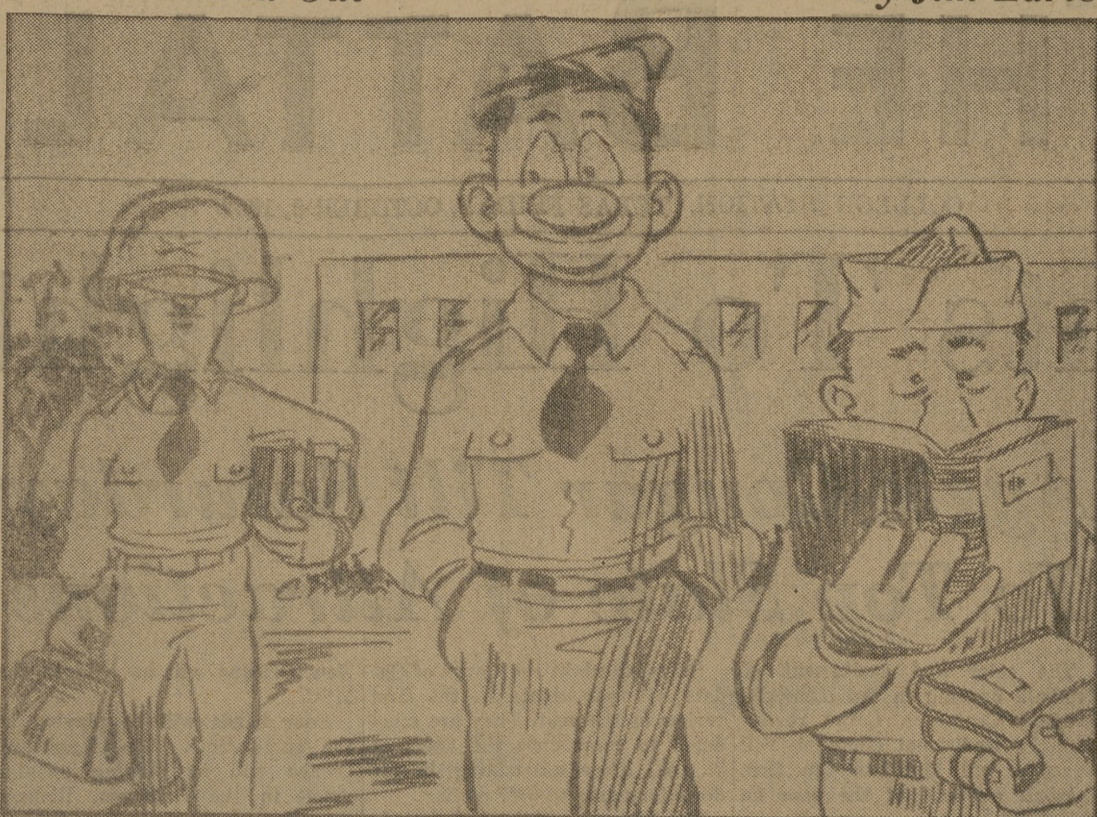

A study on "Comparative Osteology of Selected Clupeids," is being conducted by Robertson and Biggs is conducting a study on "Comparative Osteology of the Leptodactylidae."

Professor Gets Article Published

The Original Morphology of Amphibians by Dr. Richard J. Baldauf, associate professor, Department of Wildlife Management, has recently appeared in the Journal of Orpology.

This study presents new evidence to indicate the mode of evolution and the natural relationship of certain families of frogs and toads. Baldauf is now expanding his studies to other anhibian families.

How To Flunk Out

Ignore Books

Ignoring books serves a two-fold purpose in flunkin' out. First, you will be free to casually stroll to and from the coffee shop without the bother of lugging heavy books. Second, you will have a perfect excuse for not studying; after all how can you without books. You may notice by now that Aggies who make a practice of studying, find it very hard to flunk out so beware of this evil. The money you save by not buying books can be well used to pay for a first class trip home when you have flunked out.
