

Chemistry Help Sessions Assist in Passing Freshmen

The past few years have seen a definite drop in the number of students failing freshman chemistry at A&M, a course that is considered by many one of the toughest obstacles confronting a student in his first year here.

One of the main reasons for the increase in the number of students passing chemistry is the help now offered the freshmen taking the course. The Department of Chemistry is working to put chemistry on more of an individual basis, and as in other courses, conference hours are arranged with the student's professor.

Another factor in the increase is the chemistry help session for freshmen, a session held before each test that was originated by J. E. Loupot, '32, last year.

Last Friday a record number of freshmen attended the first chemistry help session of the year from 7-10 p.m. So many turned out for it, that some 150 freshmen were turned away, and many had to stand during the session.

The sessions are opened to both

Corps and Civilian students. Freshmen are informed of the sessions by Corps Scholastic Officers. Text chapters are outlined for the freshmen and discussion is based on the material covered in the freshmen's regular class lectures.

Bob Gardner, graduate chemistry student, is conducting the help sessions this year. He covers the highpoints of the course and goes over the chapter outlines that are provided the freshmen by Loupot. Loupot feels that the help sessions are doing the freshmen good. "Last year," he said, "the percentage of freshmen that failed chemistry was lower than year before last. We are expecting even less to fail this year."

Most of the freshmen that attended the session feel that it helped them in preparing for their major quiz. Charles Mills, freshman majoring in electrical engineering, said the session "did a lot of good." However, he did feel that it was much too crowded, and suggested that two rooms be set up to take care of all the students.

Donald McCann, freshman majoring in aeronautical engineering, believed the session was "a good review." "It did help," he said, "and it gave us a good idea of what the test would be."

Campus Divided into Accident Prevention Zones

The above map shows how the campus has been divided into accident prevention zones by members of the College Accident Prevention Committee. A faculty or staff member of the committee has been assigned responsibility for accident prevention in each zone. Anyone noting any condition that is unsafe or may prove unsafe is urged to contact the representative for his area as shown by numbers and markings on the map, says H. B. Segrest, chairman of the committee. Following are the keys to the zones and name and phone number of the person responsible for each zone: Zone 1—Dr. G. M. Gowing, VI 6-7016; Zone 2—H. B. Segrest, VI 6-5823; Zone 3—W. G. Breazelle, VI-6-4118; Zone 4—May. H. R. Williams, VI 6-6021; Zone 5—J. L. Boone Jr., VI 6-5773; Zone 6—Charles J. Keese, VI 6-5707; and Zone 7—R. L. Rogers, VI 6-8716. In answer to the type of buildings proposed and how was the architect selected, the board's answer was three proposed layouts done by the firm of Page, Sutherland, and Page of Austin. Jackson said the firm was one of the oldest of its kind in Texas, had on their payroll an electrical engineer, structural engineer and mechanical engineer; and had said they would build the kind of building we (the board) wanted and not the kind they thought we wanted.
