Southwest Conference Rates Second in Won-Lost Records

By HAROLD V. RATLIFF
Texas Associated Press
Sports Editor

The Southwest Conference can hold its head up with the nation in football. It actually boasts a superiority over all except one major conference and against that one—the Southeastern—it's close.

Surprisingly the league is ahead of the Big Ten Conference, which for years has boasted that it is the best in college football.

Checking the records for the past 20 years, the Southwest has fared as follows against these four major conferences:

Big Eight—won 46, lost 24, tied 4.

Pacific Coast—won 21, lost 8, tied 1.

Big Ten—won 10, lost 9.

Southeastern—won 54, lost 55, tied 4.

These figures do not include bowl competition. Against teams from these conferences, the Southwest has won 13 and lost 13 in the major bowls.

This research was prompted by a letter from Robert A. White of New Iberia, La., an old Southwest Conference follower. White said he had gotten sick and tired of hearing that the Southeastern Conference was the toughest and best league in the country. This was brought about by Louisiana State's great two-year record and the fact that Mississippi is cleaning up on the outside competition, too.

"Being an old Southwest Conference fan and a Texan until a couple of months ago, I've always believed the Southwest Conference won a majority of their interconference games," he wrote. "Do you have any statistics on the Southwest Conference versus the Southeastern Conference covering the past 20 or 30 years?"

With some regret the information was passed on that the Southeastern actually was slightly ahead of the Southwest in the past two decades. But the margin is so slight it does not indicate that the Southeastern is superior.

ing and the fact that the Southwest is ahead of the Big Ten is surprising.

It just goes to show that Texas high school football is the best in the world. Not only does it produce many outstanding college players for the Southwest Conference but it even beats itself—note that for two years in a row now it has whipped Oklahoma with its Texas-dominated teams.

Ben Schwartzwalder, Syracuse University football coach, is a lieutenant-colonel in the Army Reserve.
