Bob Rogers' Basketball Era Tops at Aggieland Since 1951

By BOB WEEKLEY
Battalion Sports Editor

Basketball Coach Bob Rogers, who began his third year at the helm at the A&M cage fortunes Tuesday night, has done something no other Aggie basketball coach has been able to do prior to the golden year of 1951. . . he's fielded a basketball team that is capable of contention for the Southwest Conference title.

His first team at Aggieland, the 1957-58 squad, posted an 11-13 season record, but upset the league leader in three consecutive games. Last year his Aggies wound up the season with a 15-9 mark, and won the Southwest Conference Tournament, the first in A&M's history.

This year the experts are billing his team as one of the top three squads in the conference, which covers a lot more ground in actuality than just the Southwest. His key to success has been the brand of ball the old pro, Hank Iba, taught at Oklahoma State University, and a brand of recruiting that has the other coaches in the conference going around with hungry looks in their eye.

Last year, his first to do any real recruiting in the SWC, Rogers came up with Carroll Broussard and John Keller, plus a couple of other top cagers who soon departed for other grazing grounds. This year he signed the top school-boy prize in this part of the country, Lewis Qualls.

But more than that, he has raided the junior colleges around the state to come up with a group of the more outstanding cagers in the Southwest.

Now whether or not the Aggies will be able to cop the championship this year is a question that only time can tell, but Rogers and his assistant, Shelby Metcalf, can give old Father Time a run for his money.

There's been more than just a few records broken since Rogers first hung his hat in the A&M athletic department, and more are going to be broken while he's here. Last year Neil Swisher set a new record of most points scored in three years of varsity basketball, and Archie Carroll racked up a new mark of most points in one season.

Tuesday night two more records were set by a Rogers-coached team at A&M, that of most points scored in one game, and the biggest point spread between two teams in one game. The first mark broke one set by a Rogers team last year against the University of Houston.

Without any real tall men in the conference this year, men of such caliber as TCU's H. E. Kirchner and Rice's Tom Robitaille, the conference should settle down to a race between good "middle" sized men and "quick" average size athletes. In this case the size should range from 6-7 on down to SMU's Max Williams' 5-10.

The Aggies have one outstanding "middle" sized man in senior Wayne Lawrence, who should be ready for an outstanding year if he can shake the injuries that have bugged him for the past couple of seasons. Just a step behind Lawrence in size, but strong on shooting ability, is 6-5 Carroll Broussard, the top sophomore in the conference.

Add to this list four, count 'em, four junior college all-Americans and you have an impressive basketball team. . . at least on paper.

The four all-Americans are Pat and Don Stanley, Wayne Annett and Kelly Chapman, the Kentucky jackrabbit.

"I don't want to make a prediction—but our team does have more height this year."
