the best at such events as SCONA." Jumping from SCONA, Tomlin was asked to compare A&M with the Air Force Academy. Answering he said the Academy seemed to be more military whereas A&M is more education centered.

Stimulating

Pattie Clare, a junior at Southwestern University, said the whole conference is stimulating. She said she has learned from the conference that college students are somewhat complacent.

"I wish everybody had a chance to attend SCONA," she said "We must try to take back to our fellow students, the knowledge received here. Only in that way can it be effective."

Miss Clare said that she likes A&M very much, pointing out that everyone is friendly.

Jane Carroll, a senior from Texas

Wesleyan College in Fort Worth, said the roundtable discussions have been the most important. "Most of the actual work is done there," she said.

'Food for Thought'

Miss Carroll said the speakers have been "food for thought." She pointed out the SCONA gives a person basic and interesting knowledge on world issues.

She said she was very impressed with A&M. "The MSC is fabulous and the entire campus has a friendly atmosphere."

Dwight High, a senior from West Texas State College, was impressed with the organization of SCONA. A government major, High said "the conference has been enlightening, well-prepared and has presented some very good ideas."

Provides Awareness

Bob Eaton, junior speech major at Howard Payne, said that SCONA "is something that is needed because of its purpose." He said it helps to provide to our future leaders an awareness of international problems.

"The speakers have been very stimulating," he said. "They have presented basic issues, basic questions and basic information on how to get along and understand others in the world."

Eaton said he appreciated the privilege to attend SCONA and hopes he can attend again next year.

"These four days could be the most important four days of my life," he said. "It stimulates one to think of America's attitude—what is it, and what it should be."

He was very impressed with Aggeland, noting the spirit, friendliness and helpfulness of the Aggies.
