Children's Clinic Scheduled Monday By Kiwanis Club

The annual Crippled Children's Clinic will be conducted at the College Station First Presbyterian Church Monday. The free clinic is promoted by the College Station Kiwanis Club for children who are physically handicapped and need qualified consulting analysis in the field of skin, bone, muscle and speech therapy and correction. The specialists are secured by the State Health Department and the treatment program is supervised and helped by the Brazos County Health Unit.

Doctors G. W. N. Eggers and Steve Lewis of the John Sealy Hospital in Galveston, Dr. R. Gassler and Dr. Joe Woodward of Waco and their associates are the plastic and orthopedic specialists who will examine patients. Misses Imogene Smith and Alta Harrison, orthopedic nursing consultants of the Division of Crippled Children of the State Health Department, with the assistance of Mrs. Mildred Turner of the Brazos County Health Unit, will decide on treatment programs from the findings of the doctors and will also determine their eligibility to state aid for special care, assignments to hospitals, and children's homes, muscular and speech therapy, corrective equipment and to rehabilitation.

More than the 157 patients examined in the clinic last year are expected from Brazos, Madison, Burleson, Grimes, Walker, Washington and Robertson counties.

The clinical services are supervised by volunteer nurses, doctors' wives and interested citizens under the direction of Mrs. T. W. Leland. A local dairy and a soft drink company will provide mid-morning refreshment and free lunches will be served to the patients.

The Brazos Valley Shrine Club and the Brazos County Crippled Children's Society join the College Station Kiwanis Club in sponsoring the clinic, under Nelson Durst, clinic chairman.

DOAK ANNOUNCES

Two Biology Profs Grant Recipients

Grants in aid of research have been awarded to two members of the Department of Biology, Texas A&M College, Dr. C. C. Doak, head of the department, announced today. Recipients are Dr. Frederick H. Kasten and Dr. Charles E. Miller.

The grant received by Kasten was granted by the National Science Foundation for support of an "Undergraduate Research Participation Program." The primary objective of this program is to stimulate interest among undergraduate students at A&M in carrying out research by enabling them to participate in research studies, now actively in progress under the direct supervision of a specialist, on a full-time basis during the summer months.

Two Planned

At the present it is planned to have two students, one under the supervision of Kasten, the other under George M. Krise, associate professor in the department. Kasten's student, who is not as yet selected, will apply new Schiff-type fluorescent reagents to the salivary gland chromosomes of the fruit fly to detect the nucleic acids present.

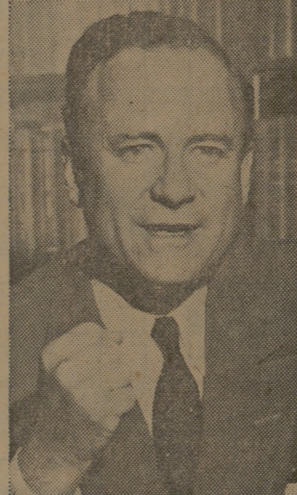

Robert Blakewood of Bellaire, a junior major in the Department of Biology, will work under Krise on the effects of low dose chronic gamma irradiation on the metabolism of an amino acid in the albino rat.

Serve As Stipends

The grant, totaling $1,400, will serve as stipends for the two students and for supplies. Each student will work for a period of 10 weeks, June 6 to August 12, 1960. Miller's award comes from the Organized Research Fund of the A&M College and amounts to $1,202. His studies will be carried on by himself and will concern the structure, taxonomy, physiology, and ecology of Coelomomyces, a fungus that attacks mosquito larvae. Mosquito larvae infected with this fungus usually die before they reach maturity, Miller says. Many different types of mosquitoes are known to be attacked by the fungus, including many types which carry yellow fever, malaria or dengue. While the fungus may ultimately prove of value in controlling these pests and disease-carriers, Miller's interest lies in the nature of the fungus itself and its relation to other fungi.
