Futrell Says New Variety of Oats Cuts Crop Losses

A new variety of oats, developed by the Wisconsin Agricultural Experiment Station, may be a major step in prevention of crops losses from rusts coming out of Mexico.

Dr. Maurice C. Futrell, assistant professor in the Department of Plant Physiology and Pathology, said the variety, known as Goodfield, is adapted for growth in northern Mexico.

The plant scientist, accompanied by Lucas Reyes of the Texas Agricultural Experiment Station at Beeville, has been visiting and recording data at rust nurseries near Monterrey and Sattillo for the 1959-60 Mexico oat testing program.

Futrell said the growing of a rust-resistant variety of oats, such as Goodfield, in Mexico would prevent the disease from overwintering in that country and then blowing into Texas. This would reduce losses from rust for Texas growers and farmers in other states to the north.

Dr. Samuel Johnson, author of "Dictionary of the English Language," published in 1755, wrote that "the true art of memory is the art of attention."
