

Fish-Shorthorn Clash Just Around Corner

The annual A&M Fish and Texas Shorthorn game is just around the corner and as in the past the game will be sponsored by the Shriners.

However, this year's game will be sponsored by the Brazos Valley Shrine Club instead of the Ben Hur Temple of Austin, who has taken the game for the past thirteen years.

The main reason that the Ben Hur Temple dropped the sponsorship is because they were engaged in two other activities.

In the past, the Brazos Valley Shrine Club has worked closely with the Austin Chapter and are certainly not newcomers to "running the show."

The Brazos Valley Club has already engineered an extensive ticket sale campaign as well as program planning. The gate receipts will be shared by the Club and A&M College and concession sales will be handled through the college.

For the halftime show a number of familiar performers will be on hand. The Aggie Fish band will perform along with the Fish drill team from A&M. From Consolidator High School will come their band as well as their girl's drill team.

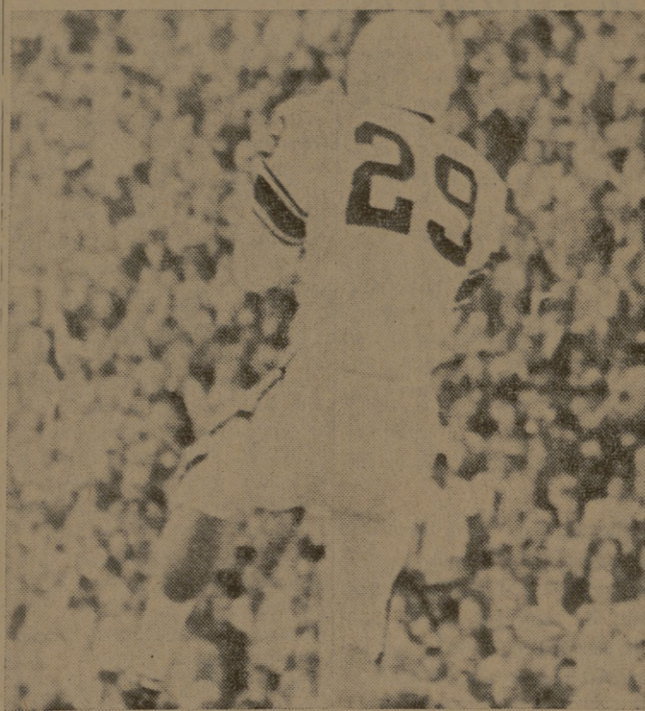

After taking over this year's annual benefit game the Brazos Valley Shriners have made a contract for the game in College Station every other year. In addition to the "home" Texas-A&M freshman games the local Shriners will choose one game at College Station each year to sponsor.

The proceeds from the game will go into the Shriners' giant fund that is used to help crippled and deformed children. More than 750,000 Shriners share this common fund raising goal that nets millions of dollars per year.

All kinds of drives are used to raise the money which includes the well-known Shriners Circus that performs all over the United States.

For their noble efforts in giving, the Shriners have come to be known as "the world's greatest philanthropists."

Leaping Ledbetter

Ronnie Ledbetter (29) jumps high into the air Saturday in Houston as he got loose from the Rice defenders to grab a pass. It was the only pass Ledbetter caught, but it netted him eight yards.
