Sound Off

Editor, The Battalion: I noticed during the Turkey Day game that another of the Aggie Traditions has gone the way of so many these past few years. The tying up of Reveille during the half is disgusting to those who have seen her guard the field during the half-time ceremonies. The band is generally recognized as the greatest marching band in the world, and a dog romping on the field at half-time takes nothing away from them, despite opinions to that effect. You Aggies had better take hold on the traditions you do have left or there won't be any more for the Trigon to snatch. What's next? No boots and co-education? John R. GOVERNOR SAYS

Kennedy's Majority Vote May Be Lost In Illinois

By The Associated Press CHICAGO—Gov. William G. Stratton said Wednesday that Illinois' 27 electoral votes might not be cast for Sen. John F. Kennedy if "strong and tangible evidence" of vote frauds develop. Stratton, a Republican defeated in his bid for a third term, spoke at a news conference in Springfield, the state capital, as a post-election turmoil in Chicago brought many accusations of vote theft from GOP leaders there. At stake was President-elect Kennedy's 8,849-vote plurality in Illinois on the basis of canvasses by the clerks of the state's 102 counties. The state electoral board postponed action on the vote Monday. Stratton is chairman of the board, composed of four Republicans and one Democrat.

Bad Policy Stratton said he does not think it would be good policy to hold up certifying presidential electors, but added: "If enough evidence of fraud is presented, we may not cast the vote." A Cook County grand jury pushed its investigation of vote charges, calling 32 witnesses for appearance Wednesday. The Chicago election board made slow progress rechecking paper ballots from 863 precincts. This deliberateness brought fuming comments by Republican leaders, who accused the city board's Democratic majority of trying to hide widespread vote fraud. Republicans held a hectic conference with Cook County Clerk Edward J. Barrett on procedure for rechecking paper ballots of 43 Chicago suburbs, which was scheduled to start Thursday. The U. S. attorney's office sifted evidence on the Nov. 8 voting for presentation to the December federal grand jury. Slow Procedure It was the slow examination procedure directed by Sidney Holzman, chairman of the Chicago election board, in checking votes in the Cook County state attorney's race that prompted accusations by Stratton and Chicago leaders. Holzman insisted that board members could not delegate the work. Republican wanted a dozen teams of deputy board representatives put to work.
