GOP's Seeking Recount Turned Down

By The Associated Press
AUSTIN — Texas Republicans seeking a statewide recount of the Nov. 8 election got another turn-down Wednesday from Democratic state officials.

GOP leaders hinted their next move may be in state or federal courts.

Wednesday afternoon Austin lawyer Hardy Hollers filed a second request that the State Canvassing Board hear immediate arguments on setting an election contest trial for Dec. 5.

Secretary of State Zollie Steakley said Tuesday the three-man board would give the Republicans some sort of hearing before the Dec. 8 contest deadline, but not before hearing from the Democrats' lawyers.

Nothing New

"We have reviewed the renewal motion and find no new matter presented. The board stands by its decision yesterday. We will not proceed until the other side has a chance to be heard," Steakley said after Hollers' second motion was filed.

Steakley said he had not heard from lawyers for the 24 Democratic electors, who are named defendants in the Republicans' contest suit.

"If they don't give us a favorable answer on this renewal motion, I see no further reason to re-urge the preliminary hearing motion," Hollers said. "Time is wasting."

He said he was convinced the canvassing board—made up of Steakley, Gov. Price Daniel and Atty. Gen. Will Wilson—has no intention of hearing any arguments, even on procedural matters, before the Dec. 8 deadline.

There have been unverified reports the GOP will make a last-ditch bid for a recount in federal courts on a claim that Texas voters' constitutional rights will be violated if a recount is not ordered.

Damage to 1,000,000

In the renewal motion overruled Wednesday, the Republicans said any further delay by the board to impound all ballots for safekeeping and to order a full dress trial "would in effect cause irreparable harm, injury and damage" to more than one million Texans who voted for Republican national nominees.

State Democratic Chairman J. E. Connally accused Texas Republicans and Texas Democrats for Nixon of "sorry sportsmanship by giving aid and comfort to the Republicans in Illinois."

A grand jury investigation and a recount of some votes has started in Chicago.

State Sen. Charles Herring of Austin said Republicans have not tried the "simple and adequate remedy" provided for election contests in the state constitution—by filing contest suits in the district courts of counties where election irregularities are alleged.

"Of course a hearing is the last thing these people want, because their publicity balloon will lose its air," Herring said.
