Space Pace Due Step-Up

By The Associated Press

GREENBELT, Md.—The new head of the National Aeronautics and Space Administration said Thursday the pace of the nation's space program will be stepped up.

James E. Webb made the statement but did not elaborate as he helped dedicate a new $27 million center for space flight research and development. The center is named in honor of an American rocket pioneer, the late Dr. Robert H. Goddard.

The agency describes Goddard as the man "who first demonstrated the practicability of space flight."

The dedication took place on the 35th anniversary of the world's first flight of a liquid-propelled engine conceived by Goddard of Worcester, Mass. Goddard often was ridiculed for dreaming of possibilities of rocket flight beyond the earth's atmosphere.

Mrs. Esther Goddard, widow of the rocket pioneer, played a prominent part in the dedication ceremonies—receiving a gold medal especially authorized by Congress to honor the early rocketeer. She also helped unveil a bronze bust of her husband. It will be placed in the center's administration building.

Rep. Overton Brooks, D-La., chairman of the House Space Committee, presented the medal. He told Mrs. Goddard it was "in recognition of the pioneering efforts and the outstanding genius of her late husband—in recognition of the unswerving devotion and true loyalty he showed as he moved towards solving the laws that bar progress toward the stars."

All members of the A&M faculty and staff are urged to attend.

Students To Go To Austin To Oppose Name-Change

A&M University Title To Be Sought

The Student Senate executive committee, Cadet Col. of the Corps Syd Heaton and Civilian Student Council President Mike Carlo will be in Austin early next week to confer with Sen. W. T. Moore and other state officials concerning the proposed college name-change.

Senate President Roland Dommert told the Senate last night the group would officially oppose Moore's proposal to change the name to Texas State University and Agricultural and Mechanical College.

The Senate voted unanimously to favor instead of Moore's name the proposal of Texas A&M University. This proposal has been made by both the College Systems Board of Directors and the College Academic Council.

Dommert also read a letter which the Senate approved to send to Moore. It stated Moore had disregarded studies being made on the campus by College Officials.

Copies of the letter will be sent to Moore, Governor Price Daniel and the co-authors of the name-change bill, Senators Andy Rogers, Ray Roberts, A. R. Schwartz and George Moffett.

It was not definitely decided which day the group will make the trek to the capital city. The bill is reportedly due to come before the Senate "early in the week."

The National Symphony Orchestra ... Concert at Town Hall

PRESENTS FOUR NUMBERS

Symphony Orchestra Plays At Town Hall Program

The National Symphony Orchestra, under the direction of Howard Mitchell, presented a four-number concert in G. Rollie White Coliseum last night at Town Hall.

Program for the evening of music included "Overture to Egmont" by Beethoven, "Appalachian Spring" by Copland, "Till Eulenspiegel's Merry Pranks" by R. Strauss, and "Symphony No. 5 in B Flat Major" by Prokofieff.

The opening number, "Overture to Egmont" was one of 10 pieces comprising the incidental music written by Beethoven for a special performance of Goethe's play, "Egmont." It has become a famous piece of the great master's work, and part credit can be attributed to Beethoven's pleasure derived from writing the work.

Second musical arrangement was "Appalachian Spring" by Aaron Copland, which was written for a ballet by Martha Graham, under commission from The Coolidge Foundation. The ballet was performed in the Library of Congress in honor of Elizabeth Coolidge's eightieth birthday.

"Till Eulenspiegel's Merry Pranks" by Richard Strauss comes from a book written over four centuries ago, telling of the eventful and tiresome behavior of one Till Eulenspiegel, and the music reflects this mood very perfectly.

According to the tradition of that time, Till was a thirteenth-century peasant of considerable rascality and with a disturbing sense of humor, who never missed an opportunity to display his talents at providing discomfort for others at his own amusement.

Strauss depicted the character of his ebullient subject excellently in this composition, and the careful listener could picture Till on the search for mischief, finding it making the most of the situation to someone else's discomfort, and finally receiving reprisals for his actions.

The story of Till continued to tell how he became quite flirtatious with the ladies, finally falling in love and being jilted by his dream girl. This rebuff enraged him, and he became quite aggressive, to a point that he was finally caught and hanged.

The final number of the concert, "Symphony No. 5 in B Flat Major" by Serge Prokofieff was in four movements, each with a different theme, which is characteristic of the author's works.

Prokofieff began his composing career at the early age of five, and at the age of nine he had composed the outline in score for a three-act opera. By 1918, when he left Russia, he had written his first three piano concertos, symphony, and many other compositions.

New U S-African Policy Indicated By Administration

By The Associated Press

UNITED NATIONS, N. Y.—The United States has given two dramatic pieces of evidence in 24 hours that the Kennedy administration is embarking on a new African policy.

If the signs are correct—and most U. N. diplomats think they are—the United States undoubtedly will win new friends. But it also may alienate some old ones.

It is not yet clear just how far-reaching the changes are, but the new U. S. position indicates a break with the big Western allies on some colonial issues and a swing toward the views of the new Asian and African countries.

The first major step in this direction came Wednesday night in the U. N. Security Council when the chief U. S. delegate, Adlai E. Stevenson, lined up with the Soviet Union and three Asian-African delegations on a resolution calling for reforms in Portuguese Angola.

In the past, the United States had almost always voted with its North Atlantic Treaty Organization allies on colonial issues. On this question, however, the United States not only split with Britain and France but it sharply challenged Portugal's attitude of non-cooperation with the United Nations on its African territories.

Thursday morning, the United States once more found itself at odds with Britain, France, Portugal and Belgium on a resolution censuring the Union of South Africa for its attitude of the territory of Southwest Africa, a former League of Nations mandate. The United States voted for the proposal, while the four NATO countries—along with five other countries—abstained.

This vote and the one on Angola are in sharp contrast with the U. S. vote last fall on a resolution calling for an end of colonialism as soon as possible. On that occasion, much to the annoyance of Asian and African countries, the United States was one of nine abstainers. It has since been learned that ex-President Dwight D. Eisenhower took the unpopular position after receiving a strong personal appeal from British Prime Minister Harold Macmillan.

Stevenson indicated a possible change when he took over in January as spokesman for President Kennedy's administration. He said the United States would not feel itself bound to support Belgium on all questions relating to the Congo just because Belgium is a member of NATO.

It had first been proposed that the Muster ceremony be held early in the morning so the band could attend special San Jacinto festivities in San Antonio.
