

INTERPRETING

Do Soviets Want Further Test Ban?

By J. M. ROBERTS
Associated Press News Analyst

The rule-or-ruin tactics of the Soviet Union at Geneva, following the pattern so common to East-West negotiations over the years, have raised a question whether the Communists want a nuclear test ban beyond what they have.

After two weary years of negotiations in which nothing vital has been settled, the Soviets are still demanding an agreement which would give them veto power over enforcement.

They now have come up with another argument which the West might have foreseen—that continued tests by France will be for the benefit of the United States and Britain, outside any test-treaty, therefore putting the Soviet Union at a disadvantage.

There is an air but not the body of validity in this. France has said that she would join in any controls agreed upon. And if such controls are to be established they will come before France is ready for any tests in which Britain and the United States, far advanced, would be interested.

France intends, however, to have herself a nuclear force before she ties her hands, not primarily as a deterrent against the Soviet Union but for use as a lever in trying to maintain equality with her allies.

It's something the Kremlin can use, however, in explaining to the world why it proposed a nuclear ban and now refuses to accept one despite all the concessions the United States and Britain have made.

The list of concessions offered by the West as the conference resumed are reshaping of measures offered before. They are important primarily as propaganda indicating a positive approach, as against the entirely negative attitude of the Soviet Union so far.

Cooperation in tests for peaceful uses of atomic devices, at the same time studying the technical means of detecting underground tests which might be directed at military uses, is an idea which has been kicked around ever since the discussions started.

The West is making it clear, however, that it is prepared to negotiate this time on every phase of the subject. There is no deadline or threat. But behind the scenes the Soviet Union understands that time has been allowed for discussion at every point without some visible approach to agreement, the show will be over.

The negative attitude displayed by the Soviets at the start suggests that negotiation, not agreement, is her real objective. Negotiation has produced an unguaranteed ban. The West is becoming very suspicious of it.

CADET SLOUCH

by Jim Earle Britain Foreign Aid Similar To U.S.

"... when I said shine, I meant my shoes."

By The Associated Press
WASHINGTON—Secretary of the Treasury Douglas Dillon says Britain now is making a foreign aid effort roughly in scale with that of the United States.

But Dillon said this country has had much less success in persuading West Germany to shoulder a proportionate part of the burden of helping underdeveloped countries. He said Japan is carrying out a fairly reasonable program, but could do more.

Dillon, who as undersecretary of state in former President Dwight D. Eisenhower's administration supervised the U. S. foreign aid program, gave his views at a closed-door session of a House Appropriations subcommittee Feb. 16. The transcript was made public Thursday.

Dillon said in reply to a question the United States has had some success during the past two years in persuading allies to help this country extend foreign aid to underdeveloped countries.

"Great Britain, for instance, in the past two or three years has about doubled the amount of money they put into the foreign aid field, so they are footing somewhat less than $500 million of governmental aid per year now. For England that is roughly comparable on a relative scale to what we are doing.

"As to Germany we have had much less success. We have been talking to them for quite some time. Originally they did not even agree this was advisable. Now they all do.

"They have announced a very large one-time program which they are in the process of raising the money for, which amounts to some $1 billion."

A Challenge

Editor,
The Battalion:
1,488 for A&M University, 144 for SB 302, "a few" for no name-change at all.

The petition, which showed The Battalion a feeling among students that a name-change would benefit the college, can be viewed in a different light if one fact is known.

The petition had no place on it for signatures of persons who wanted no name-change. It was presented to me, and I suspect many others, as a choice of two names in the event the name would be changed.

I challenge the originator(s) of the seemingly loaded petition to get the same results with a petition of the three choices instead of the lesser of two evils.

Favors Vote

Editor,
The Battalion:

The letter to the editor of The Battalion in the Mar. 22 issue from Miguel P. Garcia has a good deal of sense. He states that we should use the voting machines to take a vote of the feelings of the present students of Texas A&M on the name-change issue. I agree with him 100 per cent on this proposition, and would like very much to have a chance to voice my opinion. As a civilian student living in Walton Hall, I did not have a chance when the vote was taken through the dorms in the Corps of Cadets.
