Ranger II To Launch Rocket Doubleheader

CAPE CANAVERAL, Fla. (AP)—The National Aeronautical and Space Administration announced Monday it will attempt within a few days to launch a Ranger 2 spacecraft on a million-mile round-trip journey into space, setting up a possible spectacular rocket doubleheader late this week.

Earlier, NASA reported the first launching of the Saturn super-boosters is slated for the same time period. This will be a brief flight test of the 1.3-million-pound thrust first stage only.

An Atlas-Agena rocket is being readied to hurl the 675-pound Ranger 2 into space in a test of techniques for sending instrument packages to the moon and other planets. Ranger 3 is scheduled to land an instrument payload on the moon early next year.

NASA hopes for a more precise performance than that achieved on the first Ranger launch Aug. 23. A malfunction in the Agena second stage sent the craft into a low earth orbit instead of flinging it into space.

Most Ranger 1 systems worked, encouraging scientists to proceed on schedule with the Ranger 2 launch.

The Atlas-Agena, largest U. S. space booster, will zoom skyward in an effort to place the Agena stage into a so-called "parking orbit" 100 miles high. When the Agena reaches a desired position on its trajectory, it will re-ignite and propel Ranger 2 on a course designed to take it more than 500,000 miles out before it swings back to destruction in the earth's atmosphere some 550 days after launch.

Although primary mission will be to check the equipment and technique for lunar and interplanetary exploration, the craft will pack eight scientific experi-

RCA, builder of Tiros Satellite, needs young engineers today for spectacular achievements tomorrow

Tiros has broadened man's scope of the heavens and earth. From an orbiting observation post high in the sky, it transmits a new wealth of meteorological information to earth-bound stations below.

Tiros is only one of many RCA successes in the wide, wide world of electronics. And as the horizons of electronics steadily expand, the need for more and more competent and creative engineers increases in direct ratio. That's why RCA, now in the forefront of electronic progress, offers such tremendous opportunities for Electrical Engineers, Mechanical Engineers, and Physicists.
