

UT Males Go 'Ape' Over Panties

AUSTIN—(AP)—About 300 male students at the University of Texas shouted "panties" at giggling coeds in dormitories and wrestled campus policemen Thursday night. It was the university's first large pantie raid in years. Campus officers struggled without success to break up the demonstration, occasionally being knocked to the ground as surging students waved their arms and yelled outside dormitory windows.

Caldwell Civic Club To Hear IED Prof

Dr. Leslie V. Hawkins, professor of industrial education, will be the guest speaker at the Caldwell Rotary Club's noon luncheon Tuesday.

The program will consist of a talk on "Tools, Man's Industrial Heritage" and an exhibit of early colonial tools.

Dr. Hawkins started collecting wooden colonial tools in 1950 while working toward his doctorate at Pennsylvania State University. His collection now numbers several hundred specimens, including stone, wood and early hand-made metal tools.

A number of lingerie items fluttered down into the crowd. This caused shouts of "more, more."

The raid began, according to a number of participants, after a false fire alarm caused the evacuation of a men's dormitory across the campus from the women's dormitories.

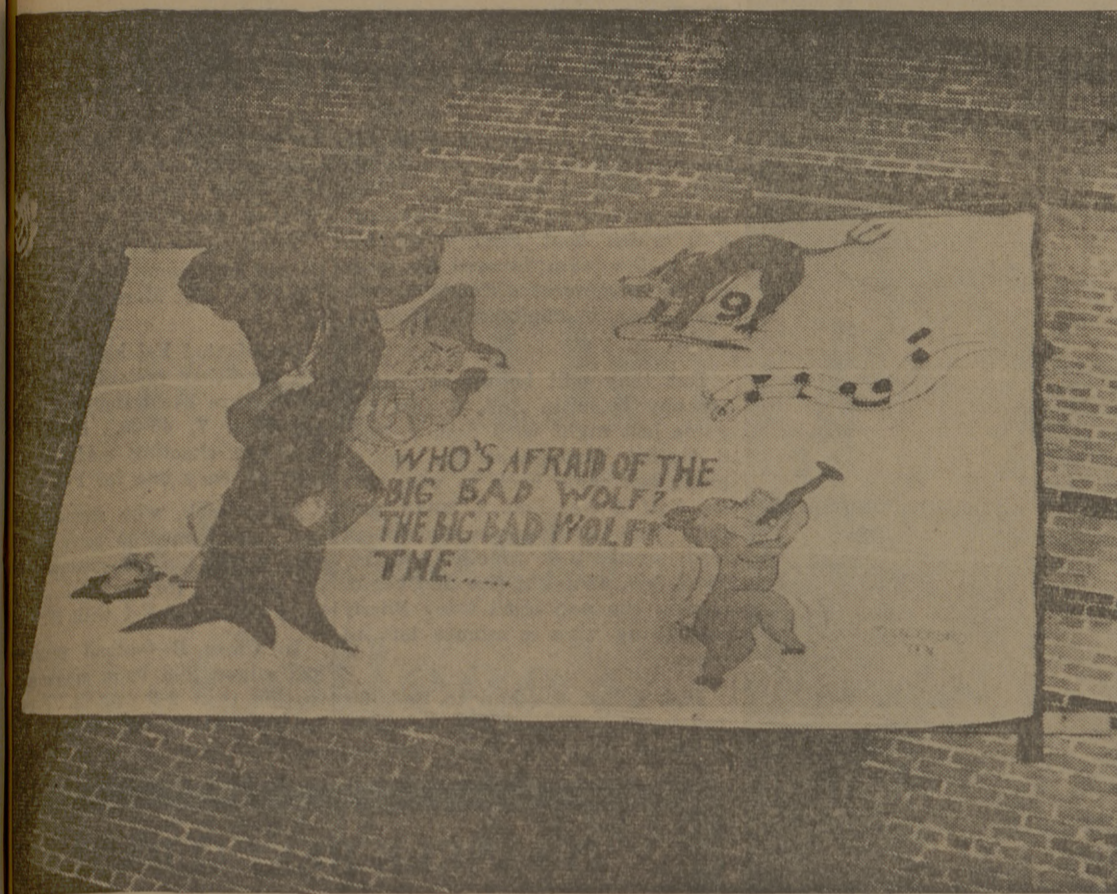

The excitement caused men's dormitory residents to move across campus, picking up reinforcements as they approached the women's residence halls at the northwest corner of the campus.

The false alarm was sounded at Moore-Hill dormitory, where most single male athletes live. Targets for the raids were Blanton and Kinsolving halls, occupied by women students.

Thurber's Pen Stilled; Noted Humorist, 66, Dies

NEW YORK (AP)—James Thurber, whose writings and drawings defined a generation of Americans laughing, died Thursday. He was the writer and cartoon artist who suffered from pneumonia and respiratory complications which followed a brain operation he underwent after a blood clot caused his collapse in a hotel room Oct. 4.

He had attended the opening of Coward's musical, "Sail Away," the night before and had addressed the cast at a party afterward.

Although he showed some improvement following the operation, he remained in serious condition and died.

Thurber's writings included magazine short stories, fables, and humorous personal essays, and he drew countless cartoons.

Although Thurber's humor often depended on imagination, he wrote with a precise, careful style and was known to rewrite a book as many as 25 times. Each word seemed to fit snugly into his sentences.

They are Dr. J. D. Fuselier, formerly of Port Arthur, and Dr. Thomas T. Walton of Bryan.

Dr. Fuselier was graduated from Tulane University. He practiced for a short while in Louisiana before moving to Port Arthur, where he has been for the past 33 years. He and his wife have one daughter, Julie, a sophomore at the University of Colorado.

Dr. Walton has been appointed as a part-time physician at the hospital in conjunction with his regular practice of internal medicine in Bryan.

Dr. Walton took his pre-medical training at Rice University and was graduated in 1951; medical degree, Baylor University College of Medicine, 1955; internship, Cincinnati General Hospital, 1955-56; captain, U. S. Army Medical Corps, 1954-58; internal medicine residency, Henry Ford Hospital, Detroit, Mich., 1958-61.

NEW SUPPLY OF WOOL CAPS LOUPOT'S

The New Yorker magazine which he joined in its infancy, was his main vehicle, but his humorous ideas got wider circulation when two of his works were made into motion pictures. They were "The Secret Life of Walter Mitty," the wild day-dreaming of a mousy man, and "The Male Animal," a study of campus life on which he collaborated with Elliott Nugent, a classmate at Ohio State University.

One of Thurber's best-known books was "My Life and Hard Times," a collection of New Yorker pieces dealing with Thurber's youth in Columbus, Ohio, his birthplace. Included in that book were such classics as "The Night the Ghost Got In" and "The Day the Dam Broke."

Thurber and others who worked for the New Yorker in its early days wrote mainly personal essays, reminiscences which were at least partly true. E. B. White once wrote that although Thurber's pieces were based on fact, he was sure most of the happenings existed in the fertile mind of the author.

White and Thurber together for some years wrote "The Talk of the Town," a column-like preface to the New Yorker and it was White who persuaded Thurber to make his drawings public.

Thurber started them as a form of doodling, a "form of nervous relaxation," and remarked that it was "years before I learned to my astonishment they could be sold." Then when he decided to draw slowly and carefully, White told him: "If you ever became good, you'd be mediocre" and Thurber recalled that he "went back to rapidity."

Many of his cartoons dealt with lop-eared dogs, irate women and small, mousy men. One of his favorite subjects portrayed the domination of American men by their women.

He and White wrote a famous satire, when psychoanalysis was in its younger days, called "Is Sex Necessary." In that book they advanced, among other things, the "smallhouse theory." In brief, that is that houses are too small to hold both men and women.

Thurber was a newspaperman in Columbus, Paris and New York before joining the magazine.

He was blinded by a child's arrow while still a boy and lost the sight of the other eye in a series of cataract operations during the past few years.

He and his first wife, the mother of his daughter Rosemary, were divorced and in 1935 Thurber remarried, to Helen Wismer. His first wife had been Althea Adams.

Among Thurber's other works were "If Grant Had Been Drinking at Appomattox," and "The Years With Ross," the latter a review of his memories of the late Harold Ross, New Yorker editor. The humorist appeared as himself in "A Thurber Carnival," a Broadway play, in 1960.

"A Nutritious Food"

These are the products of man's labor—and God's. From the moment the seedlings were placed in the warm earth, they have been under constant care.

First came the rain and the sun—and then the ceaseless work of fertilizing, cultivating, and spraying. Last, came harvest time, when the proud growers gathered the rewards of their labor.

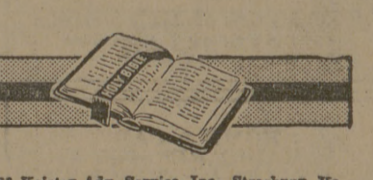

Only by such diligence can we hope for a truly bountiful crop. God has given the refreshing rain and warm sunshine, but He expects us to do our part.

And so it is with the care and cultivation of our spiritual lives. Man is endowed with many talents and qualities, but unless he tends and nurtures these gifts, they will not increase and grow.

Harvest time in the life of every person is at maturity, when men are at the peak of their usefulness and wisdom. By attending the services of the Church and by studying the Scriptures, we will realize greater happiness and contentment here on earth—and will be preparing ourselves for the RICH HARVEST of a life hereafter.

THE CHURCH FOR ALL... ALL FOR THE CHURCH

The Church is the greatest factor on earth for the building of character and good citizenship. It is a storehouse of spiritual values. Without a strong Church, neither democracy nor civilization can survive. There are four sound reasons why every person should attend services regularly and support the Church. They are: (1) For his own sake. (2) For his children's sake. (3) For the sake of his community and nation. (4) For the sake of the Church itself, which needs his moral and material support. Plan to go to church regularly and read your Bible daily.
