

Rescue Techniques, Tools Highlight Class

Heavy duty rescue techniques and use of rescue tools and equipment are areas of instruction for the 14th Heavy Duty Rescue Class, which ends here Friday.

Instruction in the five-day course is placing special emphasis on advanced rescue work and rescue team operations. The completion of this course qualifies students to use highly specialized equipment and special techniques for working at extreme heights and depths in the rescue of trapped victims.

The class is being conducted by the Firemen's Training School of the Engineering Extension Service with top rescue school personnel instructing. The class is designed for instructors, and those attending are being qualified to go back and instruct people in their area in providing an adequate rescue service.

Class members are made up of skilled supervisors and personnel of industrial organizations, fire departments, police departments, rescue squads, civic organizations, civil defense units, vocational teach staffs and public safety officials.

MASCOT

lor Bears lost 33-7. "I regret it," said Texas coach Darrell Royal after being informed of the mascot's death. "I don't think it's the type of thing we have to do to build school spirit. I regret, that's really all I can say."

Royal also sent this telegram to Baylor's Coach John Bridgers: "We sincerely regret the killing of your mascot. The incident in no way reflects the attitude of our staff and squad, and we are sorry it happened."

Bridgers replied: "We greatly appreciate your wire. We realize that neither you, your staff nor your squad would ever condone something like this, and we wish you continued success this season."

The director of the Victoria, Tex., zoo, Sid Drew, said at Victoria that he was contacted yesterday by a telephone caller who identified himself as connected with the University of Texas.

The caller wanted to know if the zoo had another cub for sale. Ginger was bought from that zoo.

Drew said he advised the caller that the zoo did not have another cub, but that Ginger's parents, Bertha and Barner, are expecting again in January or February.

COPTER ON STAGE

NEW YORK (AP)—The largest prop ever used in a stage show at the Radio City Music Hall is a 53-foot-long Marine Corps helicopter. It is used in a program saluting naval aviation's 50th anniversary.

The four-ton aircraft had to be lifted onto a special stage ramp with a construction crane 80 feet high.

49th Commended On Its Patriotism

Ft. Polk, La. (AP)—Gen. Herbert B. Powell, commanding general of the Continental Army Command, said Monday the spirit and determination of the men recently called to active duty was "the most patriotic demonstration I've ever seen."

Powell made the observation at a press conference following his inspection of the facility and troops at this recently reactivated military post.

He praised the 49th Armored Division of Texas, the largest unit now training here. He said that based on what he had seen and reports that he had received, the 49th had lived up to its reputation as an outstanding division.

He said that the men called to active duty during the recent buildup over the Berlin crisis had given up a great deal, noting that skilled workmen had been called from their jobs, students taken from college, doctors and lawyers required to give up their practices.

"This is a great sacrifice," he said, "their spirit, determination to do a good job is rewarding."

The general commented on the high morale of the units called and said that the complaints that he had received were from units that had not been called to active duty.

Powell said that the high morale shows that the "American people are determined that we will depend freedom and our way of life, that we're not going to be pushed around."

He said that the reopening of Fort Polk, an operation performed completely by reserve components, was done very well and very professionally.

Commenting on the general military strength, he said, "we have a very good defense posture. No one should mistake that."

NEW HOME

"black" glass windows on both ends of the building where the studios are located.

Research in architecture will be conducted in an adjoining building, connected by a second-floor "bridge." Here basic research in the area of light, air and sound, structural concepts and techniques will take place. This will include an airflow chamber where wind patterns and velocity effects will be tested in and around building models.

A drafting room, instrument room and offices will be housed on the second floor of the research room. A domed laboratory on the third floor will simulate sky conditions and provide researchers with an area to study natural lighting effects, conduct research with sky lights and various fenestration patterns on buildings.

Today there are approximately 350 students enrolled in the Division of Architecture. They major in one of three different fields—design, construction or landscape architecture. In design the students are educated for the professional practice of architecture while those taking the construction option are trained to serve the building industry.

The newest major offered by the Division of Architecture—landscape architecture—involves study of the arrangement of landforms, vegetation and objects for human use and enjoyment.

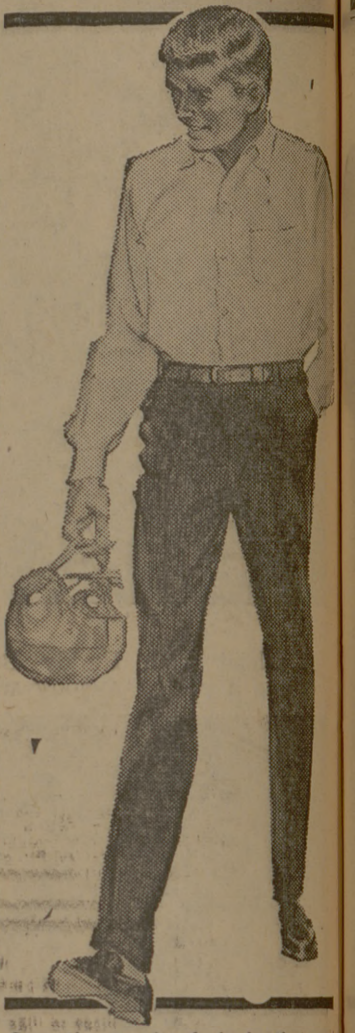

The college is now entering its 56th year of offering architecture. It was first offered in the fall of 1905 as architectural engineering under direction of Dr. Frederick E. Giesecke. The first to obtain degrees in this field here were James S. Dean, Max F. Mayer and J. Rodney Tabor, Class of '06.

Early offerings in architecture leaned more toward civil engineering, as did most schools throughout the nation. Then came the influence of the Beaux Arts School in Paris, which brought the break with traditional baroque style of architectural design, and then the contemporary school of design that dominates today.

Future students at A&M will also find opportunities to study city and regional planning and industrial design of products as current plans of the division are adopted as part of its offerings. Increased emphasis on architectural and construction research will result in an even stronger graduate program for advanced students, according to Holleman.
