Ags Sending Books To Temple Hospital

Did you ever wonder what to do with your old magazines and paper-backs? Many times they wind up in the hall trash cans or just cast aside somewhere.

Nine years ago some Aggies had a similar problem, and did something about it. They got together with the Corps Staff and the Civilian Student Council and gave them their idea.

They rounded up all the magazines and paper-backs that students were through with and sent them to McClosky Hospital in Temple. Transportation was already available. Earl Mercer, a Navasota resident, had made a personal project of getting magazines from that area and taking them to the hospital. He would take all the Aggies could get.

So Corps students handed their magazines to their sergeants and civilians gave theirs to two men appointed in each dorm.

Bennie Zinn and the Director of Student Affairs Office were located in Goodwin Hall at the time, and there was plenty of storage room. When sufficient magazines were collected, Zinn would write Mercer, and the magazines would be on their way soon.

For two years the magazines poured in, according to Zinn, almost faster than they could be hauled away. Then the supply began to tickle off. The last seven years only 500 magazines have been sent each six weeks. A few civilian dorms and the apartment areas have remained faithful to the task.

And the patients at the hospital enjoyed the magazines. They said so, through the staff of the hospital, in letters sent to Zinn thanking the students of A&M for their contribution.

There are very likely many more students subscribing to Life, Look, Readers Digest, Time, Newsweek, Cornet, Sports Illustrated, Sports Afield, and magazines of the type, as well as buying many paper-backed novels and books which are read once and discarded.

Zinn is still acting as the collector for these magazines from his office in the basement of the YMCA, and said he will see that all magazines brought to him will reach the hospital.
