Teaching Media Workshop Will End Here Tomorrow

About 60 members of the A&M staff and local residents are attending a three-day Teaching Media Workshop in Room 304 of the Military Science Building, according to Dr. Paul R. Hensarling, acting head of the Department of Education and Psychology.

Purpose of the conference is to show the uses of the overhead projector as a teaching aid. Clifton W. Darby, educational consultant of the Technifax Corporation, is conducting the afternoon lectures and demonstrations which end tomorrow.

Each of the sessions is a successive step in techniques of using the machine and production of teaching materials.

Yesterday's meeting included demonstration of the overhead projector and Diazo-master preparation. In the session held today, projectual preparation, lettering and polarized projectuals were discussed.

Reversal techniques will be demonstrated tomorrow from 1-2 p.m. The next hour will include a demonstration of photo-copying art from books and magazines, and from 3-5 p.m. non-projectuals will be demonstrated.

The workshop is sponsored by the Department of Education and Psychology.

Americans Worry Young Irish Lass

DALLAS (AP) — Americans have Rosaleen Boylan bothered and bewildered.

The pert 24-year-old Irish lass says the people of the United States don't seem to get any joy out of life and, although they pretend to, have very little fun.

"They are always thinking about something they are never going to get," she contends.

Rosaleen, now Mrs. Fred Martinez, has been in the United States a scant eight months but already she is disillusioned about some of aspects of life in this nation.

"You Americans think you are living fast," Rosaleen challenges. "But you are not. The only fast living you do is in your automobiles. In the big cars you are always going some place but do you know where you are going?"

And she thinks more efforts should be made "to filling every day with more enjoyment."

London, Mrs. Martinez says, is a far more lively city than most United States communities, despite the British reserve.

"There are people from all over the world living in London—people of all nationalities, religions and beliefs. They make it a busy, lively and interesting city where life is fun."

Mrs. Martinez, whose husband is from Albuquerque, N.M., and now is studying railway accounting at the Midland Institute in Dallas, lived and worked in London before she married two years ago.

The daughter of Mr. and Mrs.

P. J. Boylan of 77 Benburb Street, Dublin, Rosaleen is at the same time pleased and disappointed in women of the United States.

"Your American women," she says "are certainly lively ones. They are forever flying back and forth in their automobiles filled with children."

"But," Rosaleen says, "she is somewhat shocked after London to find that the women in this nation "apparently do not like to dress up. They are more casual. They obviously prefer flats and informal dresses to high heels and fancy frocks."

Nor is she impressed with employment practices used here.

"Imagine," she asks indignantly, "the employment agencies demanding 40 per cent of the first

Literature Offered Students Interested In MDAA Activity

Films, publications and other literature are now available for interested students through the Muscular Dystrophy Associations of America, it was announced here yesterday.

Leo Durst, executive secretary of the MDAA Gulf Coast chapter, said all interested persons, especially those interested in basic or applied research, could contact him in Room 1003 of the Continental Building in Houston.

MDAA deals primarily with research in muscular dystrophy, amyotrophic lateral sclerosis, myotonia congenita and amyotonia congenita.

The availability of literature and publications is part of the MDAA's general education program being carried on throughout the United States.
