An Inspection

On Saturday, March 17, Texas A&M will undergo its most rigorous and exacting inspection of the year.

The inspection will not be by military officers or scholastic rating experts. It will be by 1,500 to 2,000 Texas high school students.

These students have been invited to judge A&M in the contest so vitally important. The contest of what school to attend.

Under the general sponsorship of the Inter-Council of A&M, High School Career Day is really a composite of efforts. Transportation problems are being solved by former students' groups and A&M Mothers' Club. Each academic school of the college as well as the individual departments will feature "open houses" with special programs and tours of facilities.

And that's not all. This only covers part of the prospective college students future. His contact with Aggies and his stay in the dorms provides a look at another side.

Perhaps the most important phase of any college student's life is that away from classrooms.

This is the life in which he really learns. It is the life in which he investigates leads and clues revealed in lectures and texts.

A student's quest for knowledge must be fulfilled outside of the classroom and here is where A&M must shine.

Previously High School Career Day has been met with glee on campus. Aggies, truly trying to help convince high schoolers to come here, have sometimes gone overboard.

The emphasis has been on "what a good time we have here" instead of "how we study here." So actually, this misguided spirit may have discouraged prospective Ags.

Instead of pointing out how close Uncle Ed's is to campus or the proximity of Sam Houston State, Texas U., Baylor, U. of H. or Snook, point to the modern, up-to-date research labs on campus. Call attention to the graduate school, one of the most selective and respected in the state. And don't forget the data processing center or the nuclear research installations west of the campus.

A&M has a lot to be proud of and a lot to show off. Our campus boasts progress as well as stability by its own appearance.

So the Aggies will have a white-glove inspection March 17. It'll be the toughest one of the year.

Dr. Wolf Sends Thanks

Editor, The Battalion: May I express my appreciation for the fine coverage which The Battalion gave Religious Emphasis Week, and especially to my speeches at Guion Hall. I believe you have a very fine staff and have covered an activity most emphatically. May I wish you and all the students at A&M a blessed future, as Texans and as Americans.

I was most impressed by the hospitality and warm, yet reserved, welcome given to a stranger. The discipline on the campus was most impressive, not only among the corpsmen but also among the civilians. For this you are to be congratulated.

During the week a suggestion was made in one of the letters to the editor ("Sound Off," Feb. 21—ed.), about a variation in Religious Emphasis Week. I have submitted to Mr. Rdder and to Mr. Gay several plans which have been used successfully on other campuses. These do involve the participation of world religious leaders or laymen of many planes of life beside the clergy, and I hope would be the kind of thing suggested in the students' letter.

Again, my thanks for your hospitality and for your fine paper.

Sincerely yours, C. Umhau Wolf, Pastor 1962 R. E. Week Speaker
