French - Algerian Cease - Fire Nears

EVIAN, France—(AP)—Final details of a peace agreement for Algeria were taken up by rebel and French negotiators in a guarded conference Wednesday.

There was speculation that the talks may take no more than four or five days.

The two delegations — with France's led by Louis Joxe, minister for Algerian affairs, and the rebels' by their tough, wary deputy premier, Belkacem Krim—met for five hours in morning and afternoon sessions in a hotel of this lakeside resort.

Strict secrecy surrounded the gathering. French security forces stood guard. No news conferences were scheduled by either side.

Both French and rebel authorities are aware of the danger of inflaming further the partisan emotions fanned by terrorist operations in the North African territory.

The Secret Army Organization is campaigning with explosives, gunfire and death threats to keep Algeria French, as it has been for years, and protect the holdings of the million European residents. Moslems are waging similar street warfare in support of the desire of most of Algeria's nine million North Africans for independence.

In Algeria, where the Moslem masses marked the end of the holy month of Ramadan, the tide of violence ebbed.

mixing a dance-beat with an international motif. He started his personal hit parade with "Pretend," an instrumental featuring the guitar background so beloved by the Latin countries.

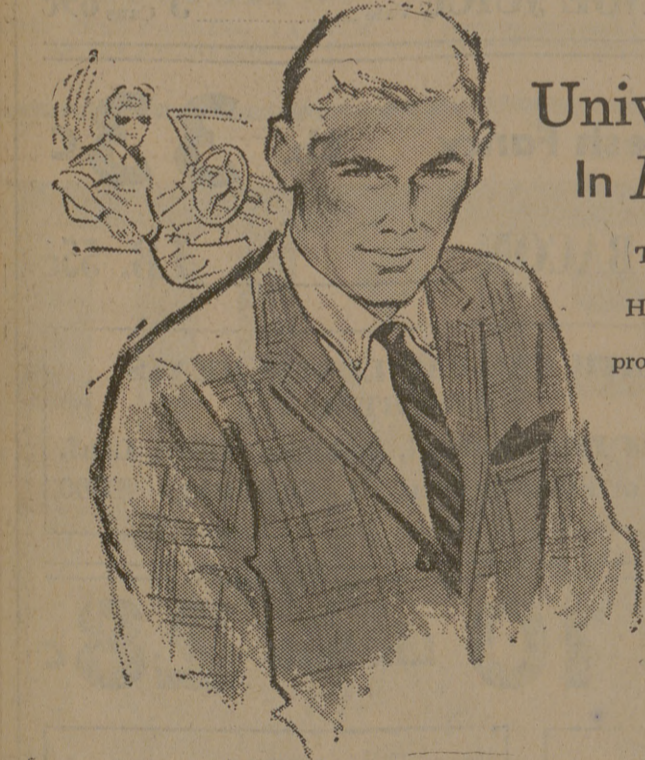

This was followed by "Caravan," which had a touch of the desert. Then continuing his list he added an African flavor with "Skokiaan," a Zulu drinking song; "Blue Mirage," always played at engagements, and "Shish Kabob," which added spice to the line.

Marterie said of student dancers of the past and present, "The kids used to dance only to the slow tunes. When we'd plan a jump number they'd crowd around the stand and go wild just listening. Now, however, they stay out on the floor when we pick up the tempo."
