Job Well Done

Over 4,000 persons throughout Texas, those who visited the campus over the weekend, can attest that once again the Aggies came through with a fine show.

Another Spring Military Weekend is history, and another triumph has been notched for those who worked and toiled on the gigantic operation.

It all began with Intercollegiate Talent Show Friday night. Besides the four-man committee that chose the acts after viewing auditions throughout the Southwest, numerous others—too many to count—helped coordinate the success. These workers include stagehands, ushers, those in charge of the programs and those who assisted the guests during their stay.

Then followed a doubleheader—Combat Ball for army cadets and Midnight in New Orleans for air force corps members and civilians.

Once again, many students and staff members had put numerous hours into the operation. And they were privileged in sitting back and seeing both guests and students enjoy their efforts.

Afterward followed Saturday and the review and Military Ball. A long list of official guests joined the individual student guests for a show well done—and to be long remembered.

Anyone trying to secure a list of all those who helped make the weekend a success would find himself with a hopeless task.

All that can be said is that those who served did a job of which they can be proud. And they did a service to A&M that will be more than repaid in the future.

Broussard Tribute; Retire The Jersey

Editor,
The Battalion:
Last Tuesday night A&M paid tribute to Carroll Broussard—three times All-Southwest Conference, honorable mention All-America and the greatest basketball player ever to don the maroon and white.

It is my belief that A&M should go one step further in its tribute to the man who holds every Aggie basketball record. And that would be to retire jersey numbers 54 and 55. It would be very ironic to see an Aggie basketball game in later years and discover that someone with half of Carroll's ability, leadership and sportsmanship wearing these coveted numbers.

'Insulting Comment'

Editor,
The Battalion:
It seems as though students at A&M cannot open their mouths to issue public statements without making an unnecessary insulting comment about students from other schools. I am referring to our Student Senate president's statement in the Mar. 8 Battalion concerning the proposed Southwest Conference Student Association, spearheaded by the University of Texas' Maurice Olian.

I wholeheartedly back the Senate's decision to reject the proposal, but hardly think it was necessary for the Senate prexy to publicly state that "the whole thing smells."

Had Mr. Hall issued a more carefully prepared statement that did not reek of spontaneous emotion, he would have been much more effective.

'Practical' Jokes

Editor,
The Battalion:
Among the Aggies, practical jokes are considered "good bull." But is it "good bull" to deface the things which are sacred to us. Few people would consider painting the All Faiths Chapel, the MSC or Guion Hall WHITE. Then why should people be narrow-minded and low enough to deface "Sully."

Is this "good bull?" If it is, then somebody has a warped impression of what the Aggie traditions stand for. What are the visitors to our campus supposed to think when they see something like that?

The statue of Lawrence S. Ross should be considered as sacred to the Aggies as the chapel, the MSC, and Guion Hall.

Is this what we want? We think not! There is no excuse for the defacing of a statue which represents a person who did so much for this institution. Wake up to the facts and try to act like adults for a change—it won't hurt you and you might find it enjoyable.
